Blazing ship circles oilfield

4 dead as tanker gets sliced

GALVESTON (UPI) — An inbound tanker and outbound freighter collided at the entrance to Galveston Bay in clear weather before dawn today, almost splitting the tanker and leaving the flaming freighter circling slowly out of control in a Gulf of Mexico oilfield.

The U.S. Coast Guard said at least four crewmen were killed and 39 were unaccounted for.

Crude oil from 400,000-barrel load of the Liberian-registered tanker Burmah Agate spilled and ignited, creating a flaming, mile-long oilslick.

Ten crewmen stayed for a time aboard the Cypriot-registered freighter Mimosa to fight the fire, but they were lifted to shore when the flames consumed the ship.

Two tugboats were sent to try to keep the vessel away from the oil platforms until she runs out of fuel.

The freighter showed a foot-wide gouge stretching 50 feet along its bow.

"A good portion" of the Burmah Agate's cargo was in the water and we've got a raging fire out there, an official said.

He said the tanker remained afloat and "stable," but he said "everything is temporary."

The Coast Guard said seven of the Mimosa's 28 crewmen were missing and 32 men from the Burmah Agate's 38-man crew were unaccounted for.

Fourteen men were hospitalized in Galveston, five were treated and released and more were en route.

The injured from both ships, mostly Taiwanese crewmen, were taken to John Sealy Hospital, where they stood dazed and blackened by smoke.

Many were barefoot and clad only underwear, as most had been asleep when the crash occurred.

"There was an explosion and when I opened the window smoke just rushed in," Chang Ying-chuang, a Taiwan crewman from the Burmah Agate, said.

The crash occurred about six kilometres from the entrance of Galveston Bay.

That's good mileage!

MONTVALE, N.J. (UPI) — Mercedes-Benz says its experimental diesel-fuelled vehicle designed to reach maximum of fuel economy set a record of 4,879.1 kilometres per gallon.

The automaker said Wednesday the mileage record was set at the International Fuel Saving competition at Veltheim, Swizterland by a torpedo-shaped vehicle with bicycle wheels, driven by Frank Maier, 17, of Stuttgart, Germany.

The mark was accomplished by sacrificing speed. The little car moved at only 16.5 kilometres an hour for 96 kilometres.

The 4,879 kilometres per gallon surpassed the previous record of 3,668 kilometres per gallon set in July by an experimental one-passenger vehicle using a tiny air-cooled engine.

Egg-throwing youths battle Sidney RCMP

Twenty-four youths were arrested after a crowd of about 200 armed with eggs, rocks and bottles attempted to storm the RCMP station in Sidney Wednesday night.

It was the most serious Halloween disturbance in the capital region.

While no one was injured and little damage reported, near-riot conditions prevailed until the beleagured 15-member Sidney detachment called in reinforcements from Colwood.

Most of those arrested were charged with breaching the peace and were released to the care of their parents but five adults were kept in police cells overnight to cool off.

Two are expected to face charges, one for wilful damage and the other for possession of an explosive device, a Molotov cocktail.

A Sidney RCMP spokesman said the crowd started forming early in the evening on Beacon Avenue and began hurling eggs at motorists and pedestrians.

It then turned on the police station.

Officers using loud-hailers broke up the unruly mob but it returned about an hour later armed with rocks and bottles.

The spokesman said at that point 15 officers, including a dog team, were called in from Colwood.

The reinforcements arrived about 10 p.m. and within an hour the crowd had dispersed, except for small pockets of rowdies who were quickly taken into custody.

Colwood RCMP fielded 30 Halloween-related calls in two hours and also had egg-throwers to battle.

One call involved a possible arson case at a body shop at Sooke Road and Humpback. Damage is estimated at $1,500.

Shop owner Max Johner extinguished the fire before firemen arrived.

A crowd of about 100 youths squared off in an egg-and-butter-pattie war in Westbrook Plaza. When they started aiming at passers-by, police moved in and cleared out the plaza without incident.

Colwood police also received one complaint of a spiked treat — a razor blade stuck in an apple that was handed to a youngster in the Glen Lake area.

In other parts of the region, three young trick 'n treaters were robbed of their goodie bags in Oak Bay and Colwood and an Esquimalt boy's eye was injured by a firecracker.

For the most part police and firemen felt it was one of the quietest Halloweens.

In other areas potentially dangerous pranks ended up causing little damage

Strikers steal PQ thunder

Times News Services

QUEBEC — Rampaging Quebec civil servants threw the planned release of Premier Rene Levesque's white paper on sovereignty association into chaos today, forcing cancellation of an advance distribution of the paper to newsmen and postponement of a news conference by Levesque.

About 1,000 striking workers invaded a hall where a press lock-up was scheduled and ripped ribbons out of typewriters, threw paper in the air and sang Solidarity Forever.

"We made our point," beamed one demonstrator after the lock-up was cancelled. "This is more important than the referendum," another protestor said.

About 600 of the protesters got into the convention hall itself and occupied seats reserved for reporters. They also ate everything laid out for the media's buffet breakfast and refused to leave.

About 20 security officers with the Quebec City Police Force and the Public Works Deptartment looked on helplessly.

See white paper story on Page 6.)"

The civil servants, members of the 35,000 member Union of Provincial Civil Servants, have been without a contract since June, 1978. The government Wednesday rejected the union's latest contract proposal, and the union has threatened to shut down the government completely next week if its contract proposal is not accepted by Sunday.

About 300 reporters from across North America were due to be locked up in the convention hall so they could study the 100-page document before Premier Rene Levesque's mid-afternoon news conference on the contents of the white paper.

The main contents of the white paper already had been made public by various reporters who obtained leaked copies.

After attacking the press centre, the demonstrators — urged on by burly shop stewards — began converging on the assembly building.

Several dozen demonstrators succeeded in entering the building through a basement window.

Bandits grab $1M in daring truck holdup

MONTREAL (UPC) — Police confirmed today that more than $1 million was taken by at least three bandits who hijacked a security truck Wednesday while the lone guard was in the van.

Holdup division Capt. Henri Marchessault said today the amount stolen in the "extremely well-organized job" was $1,144,000.

"That's a lot of money and to do a job like that, it took quite some planning," Marchessault said.

He said police were hunting least three suspects but that more may have been involved.

Trade surplus takes big leap

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's trade surplus leaped to $641 million in September, the largest monthly surplus since March, 1978, Statistics Canada reported today.

The huge surplus compares with revised figures showing trade deficits of $60 million in August and $13 million in July.

The federal agency said in its monthly trade report that the surplus in merchandise trade for the first nine months this year is a seasonally-adjusted $1.5 billion, down from $2.17 billion in the same period in 1978.

The monthly report contains preliminary figures which are subject to revision as more up-to-date information becomes available.

Finance Minister John Crosbie has forecast a trade surplus of $2.1 billion this year, down from $3.5 billion in 1978.

Major reason for the decline has been the expected slower demand for Canadian goods in the U.S. — where about 70 per cent of exports are sold — because of a recession in that country.

The report on September trade showed total exports were up 12.5 per cent from a month earlier to $6.03 billion while imports declined six-tenths of one per cent to $5.39 billion.

Exports to all countries to date — not seasonally adjusted — are $46.57 billion, up from $38.21 billion in the same period a year earlier. Imports stand at $45.85 billion compared with $35.95 billion a year earlier.

No evidence of police rough stuff: deputy

The Victoria police force defended itself Wednesday against allegations that a few officers have used excessive force against young people.

And Police Chief Jack Gregory told the police board legal steps should be taken to prevent people from making "unfounded allegations of misconduct."

Gregory's comments were apparently directed at community worker Shirley Wakeham who in recent weeks has brought forward allegations of excessive roughness used by certain members of the city force.

Board member Janet Baird urged that the officers under question be identified after Wakeham in a letter reiterated her original claims that some policemen have assaulted youths.

Said Gregory: "Wakeham doesn't bring her complaints to us, she takes them to the press. We should be looking at some legal steps to perhaps stop her.

"This has a serious effect on the morale of the department where we are continually bombarded by these unfounded allegations of misconduct."

Deputy chief constable Jim Smith wouldn't give the names of two police officers who have been the subject of some of the complaints, but when pressed by Baird, he said they are known as "Starsky and Hutch," after the dynamic duo of a television police drama which features high speed chases and occasional rough stuff.

Complaints about these police officers and a third juvenile officer accused of roughing up young people had been made at a meeting of police and several members of the public, Smith acknowledged.

He said he talked to the three constables but added none of them were disciplined.

Smith said Wakeham, who until two weeks ago was a youth worker employed by the human resources ministry for View Royal, Esquimalt and Vic West, named a juvenile officer as using excessive force.

"I spoke to him and he said 'I only saw this woman once in my life. I know nothing about her and she doesn't

Bennett denies plotting 'tricks'

Premier Bill Bennett today denied that he and other Social Credit party officials plotted a dirty tricks campaign at Harrison Hot Springs in 1974.

As the premier was issuing his denial, another phoney letter to a newspaper editor signed with the name of an NDP supporter was made public.

The latest letter, the third with the name of Gordon Townsend forged, appeared in the Cowichan Leader at Duncan last March 28.

Leader editor Leslie Leyne said Wednesday the letter's authenticity was not checked.

The letter criticized NDP MLAs for attacking the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. share distribution.

Meanwhile, Social Credit party president Les Keen promised today in Vancouver he will introduce proposals to remove dirty tricks from election campaigning during the party's convention which opened here this afternoon.

"All parties made mistakes in the heat of the last election battle," he said.

Keen claimed, however, the mistakes were made by overzealous individuals and said the party must gain firmer control over the campaign process.

Bennett's alleged involvement in dirty tricks was claimed by radio station CJOR, which quoted an unnamed party source as saying the dirty tricks campaign was hatched at meetings at the Harrison Hot Springs hotel and at a Vancouver hotel.

The Socreds have been reeling under accusations that dirty tricks — the subject of a province-wide RCMP investigation — were developed by key party figures a year ago for the May 10 provincial election.

But Bennett said today he was referring to the NDP's successful door-to-door canvassing, not dirty tricks.

Bill Vander Zalm, current municipal affairs minister, Grace McCarthy, past-president of the party and current human resources minister, and Hugh Harris, Bennett's campaign manager and current executive director of the party, also were reported to have attended the meetings.

Vander Zalm said he has never discussed dirty tricks with those people, adding he is disappointed the radio station would stoop to making such statements.

Harris said he attended the meetings as a constituent and has been involved in the party only since June 1.

As executive-director, he said, he would never condone dirty tricks and has never heard the premier "come remotely close to condoning them."

Peter Hyndman, party president during the 1975 election campaign and now the MLA for Vancouver South, said he attended some of the meetings at Harrison Hot Springs.

He said he heard people discussing letter-writing and phone-in campaigns, but no mention was ever made of using phoney names.

Keen said dirty tricks have a long history in B.C. politics but that era is coming to a close and he predicted the next election will be the cleanest in B.C. history.

Keen said Social Credit is beginning " a cleansing convention" but the success of its clean-up will be limited unless other parties get the message as well.

Keen spent the morning in meetings with other Social Credit officials, hammering out the details of his proposals to clean up campaign tactics.

Bennett is also planning a statement on campaign integrity.

Keen said the public probably is unaware of the extent of abuses that have taken place in recent campaigns.

He said he personally was subjected to dirty tricks in the last provincial elections while running in Coquitlam-Moody against Stuart Leggatt of the NDP, Orest Jakubec of the Conservatives, and Calvin Segur of the North American Labor Party.

Leggatt won the seat.

But Keen declined to give details of the dirty tricks, saying it would not serve any useful purpose to re-open old wounds.

He said the incidents in Burnaby-Willingdon riding during the last election, however, demonstrate that Social Credit was not alone in using unfair tactics.

Keen said supporters of NDP candidate Jim Lorimer encouraged a Conservative candidate to run and signed his nomination papers.

The aim was to split the right wing vote which was expected to go to Social Credit MLA Elwood Veitch.

The Tory withdrew when he learned that his papers had been signed by NDP supporters, Keen said.

Veitch lost to Lorimer in that election.

The Socred caucus met for more than nine hours Wednesday in Richmond but failed to come up with any decision on the future of party researcher Ellen MacKay, who with former chief researcher Jack Kelly, has been implicated in the dirty tricks campaign.

Kelly quit three weeks ago and both he and MacKay have retained a lawyer.

Socred caucus head Jack Kempf, the MLA for Omineca, said the dirty tricks issue was fully debated but no decision on MacKay's future will be made until she returns to work for the caucus next week and "gives her side of the story".

know anything about me'," said Smith.

"I just spoke to them to get their version of what is going on in the city. I didn't think any discipline was warranted. I have no evidence that any young man on the street of 15 or 16, or 12 or 17 has been roughed up."

The person who had complained identified the two policemen as Starsky and Hutch but later pointed them out in person.

Mayor Mike Young, chairman of the police board, said he had received a letter on the subject from Wakeham, which stated most police are co-operative but a few have a poor approach to youths.

The Times has obtained a copy of the letter, in which Wakeham said it is "important that we go over the events of the last months carefully in order to examine the relevant issues without hysteria, personalities or defensiveness."

She said Smith had called a meeting Sept. 5 to which Rev. Phil Ross, Gipp Forster — who run the Upper Room and Mustard Seed drop-in centres downtown — and she were invited.

"Several problems were explored at this meeting, including the downtown sections that were felt to be problem areas in terms of street children and the response voluntary social agencies receive from the police.

"After a brief discussion of the problem areas we discussed the second issue."

All participants agreed that "most police officers are co-operative and have a genuine desire to assist the young people. However, a few officers have a poor approach to the young."

The quotes are from Smith's account of the meeting, made public at the last police board meeting.

"It is important to stress that all present at the meeting felt generally supportive of the force, and that all complaints made at that time were acknowledged as emanating from the work of a very small number of police officers. Specific complaints were made by me and also by Gipp Forster of the Mustard Seed."

Wakeham continued in the letter: "The deputy chief assured us that he would check into these complaints. Approximately 10 days later I was assured by a member of the police force that the officers involved had, in fact, been disciplined."

She said it is obvious that problems exist if only from a public relations point of view. I do believe that the possibility of the use of excessive force exists."

She referred to an earlier letter dated March 12 this year which she sent to the police board — which the mayor claims never was received — on behalf of a young man who alleged that he was assaulted by two Victoria city police officers.

Wakeham said the young man was terrified of what he termed getting even by the offending officers and told her, several staff persons and a reporter that he had in fact been assaulted on three separate occasions within six months by the same officers.

She said she has complained not to discredit the fine work done by the police force generally.

"They do a difficult job well. Just as there are inexpert mechanics, inept politicians and careless doctors, there are men and women unsuited to the very demanding role of police work. This only increases the need for a well-informed and vigilant police board.

"Further, the police board must be sensitive to developing new methods of encouraging people to come forward to lay complaints."

and no injuries. In Sooke, someone threw a large block of ice at a passing vehicle. In Esquimalt a couple of youths strung up a fishing line across the road in the 600-block Grenville just before Robert Sawyer of 933 Admirals drove by on his motorcycle. The line struck the windshield of the bike and Sawyer escaped unharmed. In Central Saanich someone set off an explosion that blew apart a Goodwill box at Vernier and West Saanich Roads.

There were a number of other reports of egg-tossing throughout the region.

The home of Victoria lawyer Robert Price at 3465 Midland was attacked by a gang of egg-armed youths. The same gang was also believed responsible for similar forays on homes at 2527 Dalhousie and 2159 Central.

Saanich's special Halloween patrol investigated 35 complaints. A couple involved fires set in the bush off Tyndall and on the road near the Fable Cottage.

There was no damage reported in Victoria. Only three hydrants were turned on, all in Vic West.

On the lighter side, someone placed a toilet in a telephone booth at Douglas and Niagara. The prankster left a message saying he hoped hoped persons making calls would be able to do so "in complete comfort."

Radio walkout 'inconvenient'

The latest walkout by federal airport and marine radio operators is making things awkward but not intolerable for the Pacific Rescue Centre in Esquimalt.

Commenting on an earlier report that the safety of fishing vessels off the West Coast could be jeopardized by the strike, a spokesman said any distress calls from fishing boats would be relayed by a number of various sources. Fisheries ships, the Coast Guard or the many tugs plying the coast are all monitoring radio signals.

The spokesman added, however, that the situation is very inconvenient.

"It would be obviously more convenient if the radio operators were on the job," he said.

The operators started walking off the job across the country Wednesday after government-union contract talks broke down in Ottawa.

the weather

A ridge of high pressure kept skies clear across southern B.C. overnight and temperatures dropped to near zero even at the coast. A weak frontal system stretches from the Yukon to the north coast and its cloud band has become linked with a system offshore. Both systems are moving very slowly eastwards. High clouds from the systems have reached Vancouver Island but the southern interior and much of the south coast will enjoy another fine fall day.

Conspiracy blamed for MD's election

A group of B.C. Medical Association members have complained to the Canadian Medical Association over the election of Dr. D. W. Thomas of Burnaby, as president of the national association.

The doctors say Thomas' election was unconstitutional and that a conspiracy took place within the BCMA to prevent the election of Dr. William Jory of Vancouver.

Jory said Wednesday the complaint was sent last week by Dr. K. C. Hill, past president of the BCMA, to Dr. D. L. Wilson, current president of the national body.

However, Dr. Mel Petreman of Nanaimo, current president of the BCMA, said the allegations were not substantiated.

In May, a mailed ballot was held in B.C. to choose the provincial nominee for president of the national body. Jory won that election over Thomas with 55 per cent of the vote.

However, at the national election in Toronto in June, Thomas' name was brought from the floor by the BCMA delegation.

Petreman said BCMA directors felt they could do a better job of selecting a nominee. Thomas beat Jory 124 to 47.

Petreman said membership voting for nominees was traditional, not constitutional.

Jory said Thomas claimed in his curriculum vitae to have seven years of membership experience in the CMA when in fact he had four years.

Jory said his own curriculum vitae was submitted to Dr. F. N. Rigby, executive director of the BCMA, in February to be read to delegates in Toronto.

However, he said an outdated curriculum vitae was read to the voting membership instead of the current one.

The matter arose from a dispute between the establishment group and the reform movement within the BCMA.

Petreman classifies himself as a member of the establishment while Jory and Hill are members of the reform movement.

Before sending the complaint to the CMA, Hill presented the issue to the BCMA.

In a tie-breaking decision, Petreman voted to not strike an investigate committee but moved to send the matter on to the national body.

No word has been received from the national body on whether it will act on the complaint.

Island affected by Hydro strike

Members of the Office and Technical Employees Union expanded job action against B.C. Hydro on Vancouver Island and the mainland today.

A spokesman for the union, which represents about 3,600 workers, said the Dunsmuir substation and the Qualicum office on Vancouver Island were affected, preventing power connections in those areas.

On the mainland, employees in the Newton-Langley office were locked out and there were disruptions at Fort St. John, Williams Lake and Invermere.

Forty-four employees in districts outside the Vancouver area were either locked out or on strike today, the spokesman said.

The workers have been without a contract since March 31. No meetings between the two sides were scheduled.

CP Air clerks join new union

VANCOUVER (CP) — About 330 CP Air office workers, who last September dumped their union because it failed to negotiate a contract for them, received permission Wednesday from the Canada Labor Relations Board to join another union.

The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers is the new bargaining agent for the accounting and computer service employees who voted to disassociate themselves from the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks.

Injunction refused on legal ad hearing

VANCOUVER (CP) — County court Judge D. B. McKinnon ruled Wednesday that the Law Society's benchers have a statutory right to conduct hearings and make decisions on what they consider proper conduct for a lawyer.

MacKinnon made the ruling in dismissing an application by lawyer Jack D. James for an order to halt discipline proceedings against him because he advertised fees for his downtown office, the Law Shoppe.

James had sought the injunction on the grounds that he might be deprived of his right to practise law.

His lawyer, Art Vertlieb, said the society's move was unlawful because a ban of fee advertising is contrary to the Combines Investigation Act.

He said that Justice A. A. Mackoff, in an earlier case involving lawyer Donald Jabour, had ruled that the Legal Professions Act did not give the society the right to prohibit advertising.

Jabour took his case to B.C. Supreme Court after a law society discipline committee recommended he be suspended from practising for six months.

MacKinnon said that he was being asked to assume that the discipline committee will, at the time of James' hearing Nov. 14, act contrary to law. The judge said he did not think an injunction was appropriate at this time.

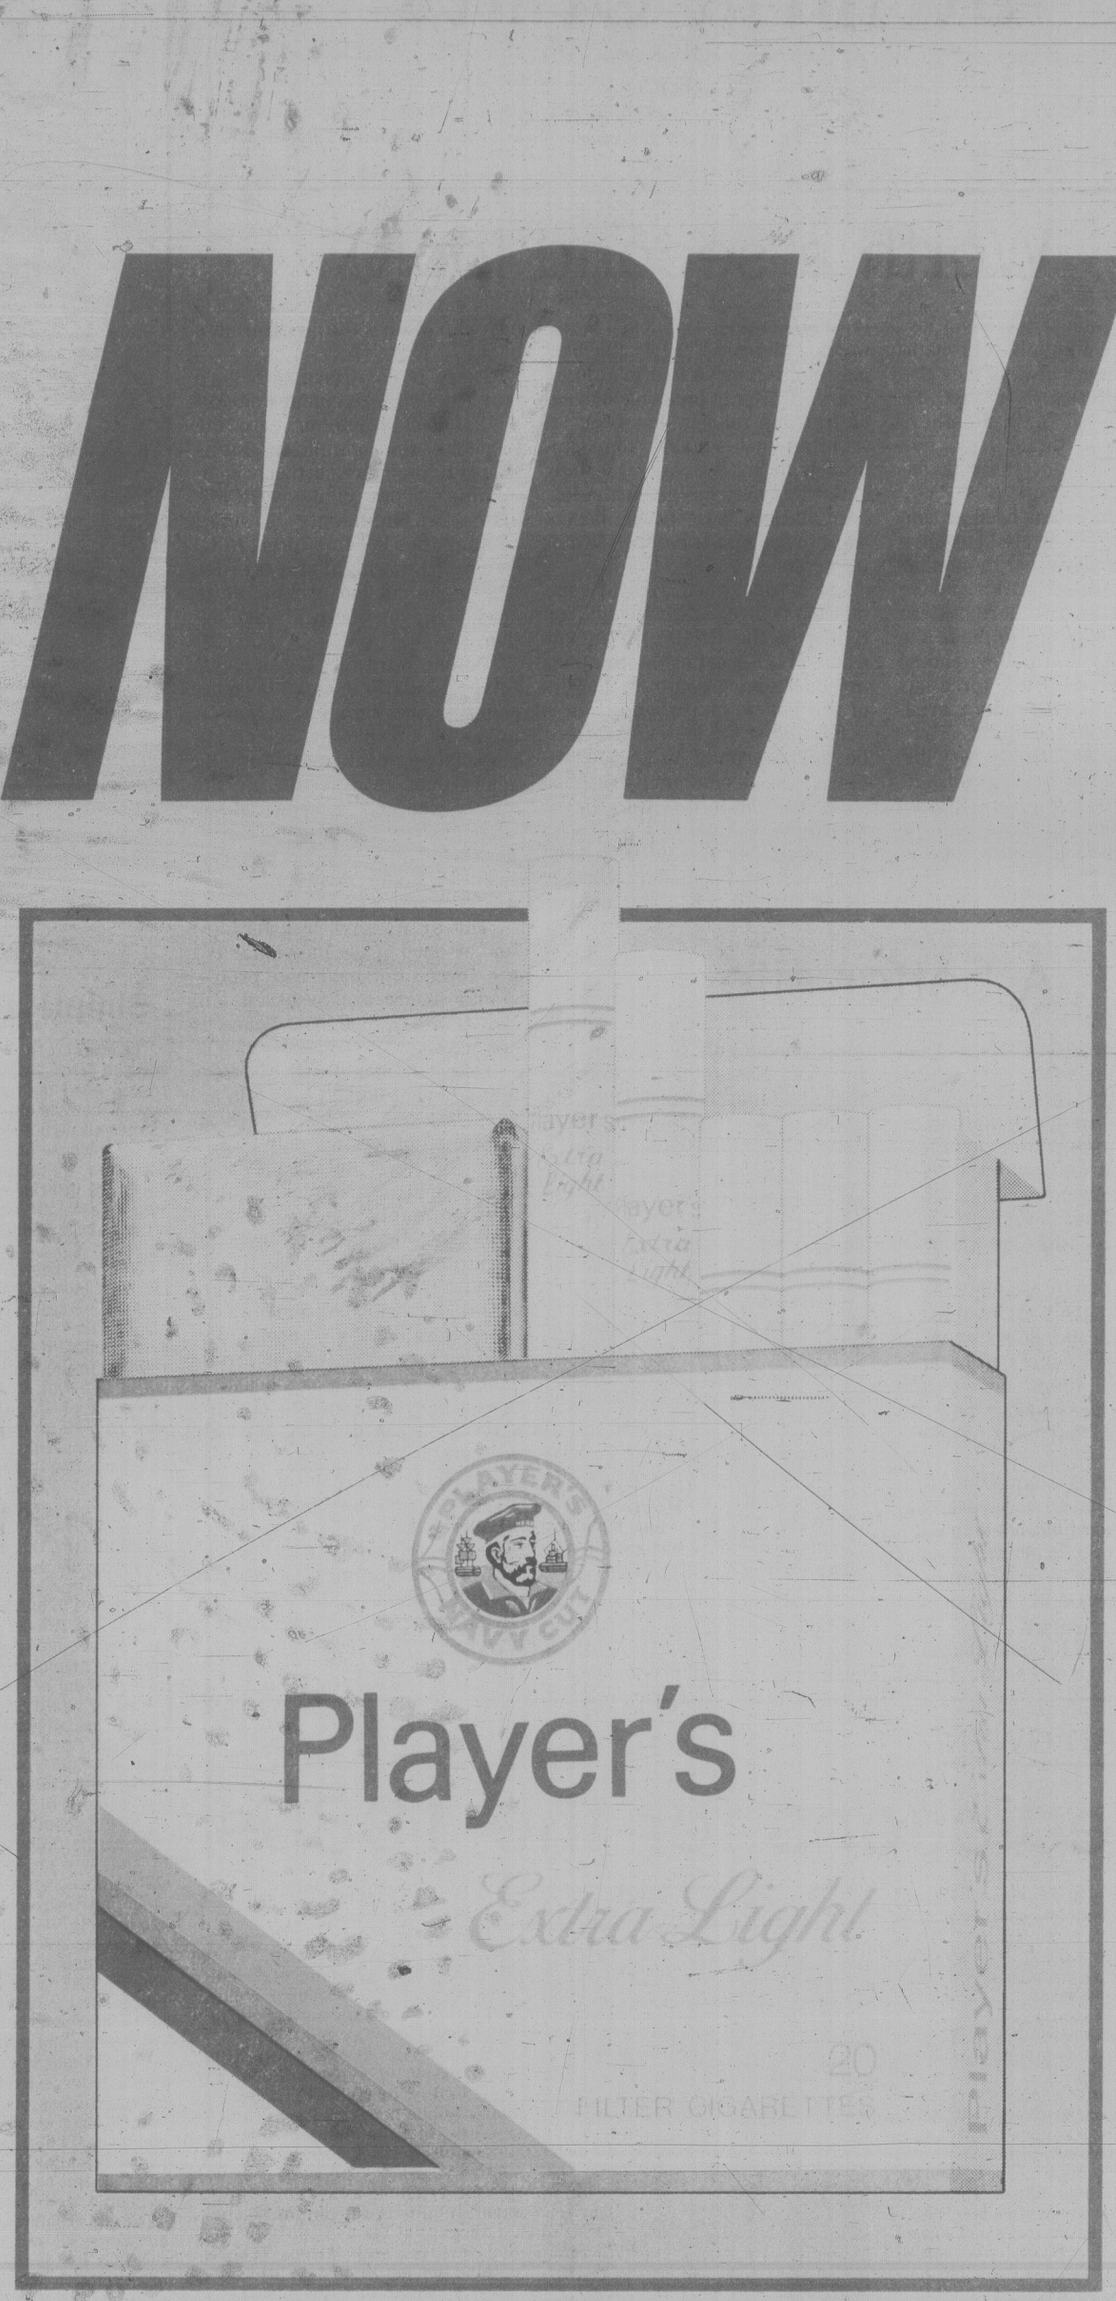

$1M for grabs for research

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Science Council of B.C. has announced a province-wide competition for $1 million in research grants.

Proposals must be received by Dec.1, said Dr. Erich Bogt, council chairman.

Eight committees established to evaluate the submissions will allocate the money early next year.

Worth a second look

One thing about the Mounties stationed in communities throughout B.C.: almost always they are from out of town. It's RCMP policy to move their members about. In two, three, four, five years officers get their transfer papers.

This tradition has been around for so long that few civilians have questioned it. However, a number of residents from McBride and the surrounding area in northeastern B.C. are attempting to make the RCMP justify that policy, and so far, the national police force has not made an outstanding argument to refuse exceptions.

Constable Al Thiel, 36, was dismissed from the force because he refused a transfer to Williams Lake. He had put down roots in McBride and earned the respect of the community.

The reaction of the community is what makes this case noteworthy. Many say Thiel is the best policeman they've had in a dozen years. A drop in incidents of vandalism and robbery has been attributed to his grass roots approach to police work. One lady claims his work has given him folk hero status. Those people do not want to see him leave the town or the force.

At a time when a royal commission is investigating illegal activites of the RCMP, in an age when civil liberties associations are questioning arbitrary powers of the police, and when crime is generally on the increase, it must be heartwarming to the RCMP brass to see a community respond so well to the force's work in the McBride community.

But of course, McBride residents are not responding so much to the institution as to the individual who wears the institution's badge.

There is no reason to believe that Thiel's replacement wouldn't do as good a job, or earn the respect of the community. But as people in the more northerly communities know, to many RCMP officers assignments to small communities become terms to be endured. Knowing that a transfer lies in the not too distant future often relieves their dissatisfaction.

Police work, to be successful, particularly in small town becomes more than just a job. A man with a dispassionate and impersonal approach will not usually achieve as good results as the officer who gets to know, and to some degree gets involved with the community. By the response from McBride residents, Thiel was very much involved.

The RCMP says transfers are for the good of the individual and the force. Personal and professional needs are assessed and orders are issued. Obedience is compulsory.

However, that system of career management doesn't take into account the few instances when an individual officer not only finds a place he likes, but at the same time is doing an outstanding job in the community. It would seem some personal and professional requirements are being met.

With transfers every few years it is difficult for policemen to develop a rapport with people outside the force. The force in far too many towns is seen as a body one step removed from the community, a factor that doesn't help its work.

Transfers likely suit the majority of officers for one reason or another. But in the rare occassions, when the barrier between police and community is overcome by an individual officer, the RCMP might be doing itself a service by allowing that relationship to continue.

A better site

Vancouver Mayor Jack Volrich and his team were sadly disappointed last week when they lost out on a chance to bid internationally for the 1988 Winter Olympics.

If Volrich and his crew were unhappy, however, most other British Columbians were probably quite pleased with the committee's decision.

It's not that it wouldn't have been nice to have had Olympic-calibre skaters and skiers right on the doorstep; it's just that in these bad economic times, most people in the province wonder how we could afford such an extravaganza.

Even Volrich's bare-bones proposal (and what Olympic proposal in recent years has ended up without a gigantic overrun?) would cost $80 million — a minimum of $35 for every man, woman and child in the province.

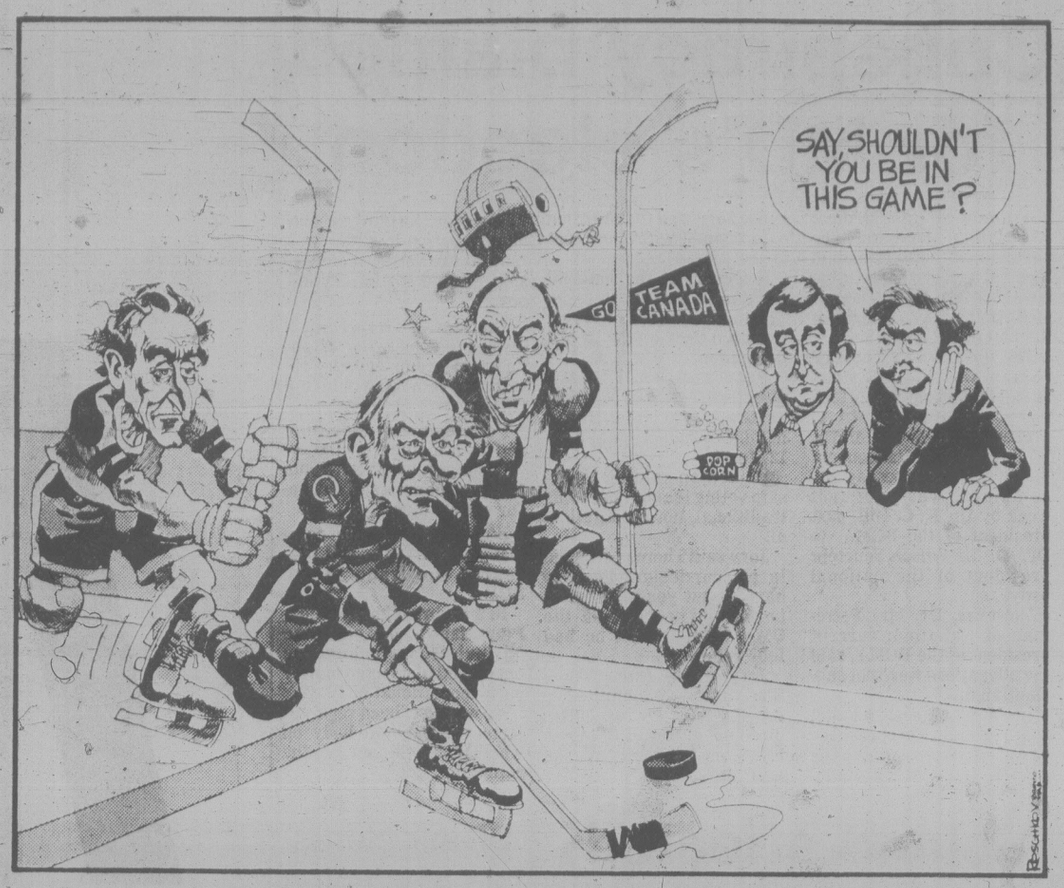

Nearly all of it would doubtless have come out of public funds. Most people can see better uses for even $35 of their tax money than building bobsled runs and athletes' dormitories that really don't have much lasting value.

Calgary, on the other hand, might be an excellent choice as a host city for the games. It has natural amenities at Banff equal to those of Vancouver.

Moreover, Calgary can afford it. As Alberta behaves more and more like an Arab oil sheikdom, the province has more and more money to toss around on such projects.

The $217 million that Calgary proposes to spend on new facilities for the games matters about as much to Albertans as $217,000 would to the government of any other province.

Besides, Calgary is close enough that British Columbians who want to can travel to see those Olympic-class athletes anyway.

Simple absolutes

The article by Conor Cruise O'Brien (Oct. 24: Pope on Birth Control: a good man giving bad advice) was a convincing statement of the dangerous dichotomy we all seemed to make: because of the Pope's personal charisma we allowed him to make doctrinal utterances that are out of step with the times, indeed which pose a threat to the well-being of our civilization.

Now my purpose is not to dispute Mr. O'Brien's point — "the hope that the intellectual as well as the emotional resources of a religion of compassion" would "be deployed in a national relation to the realities of the modern world" — but to interpret the phenomenon of the Pope in a context which may attach a somewhat different significance to the juxtaposition of charisma and intractability.

First of all: what causes such a warm and devoted response to the Pope? Well, apart from the vestments, the ritualism, the iconogaphy that accompany the man's office, it is clear there is after all something within us that craves to touch wholeness, purity, innocence. Above all the Pope conveyed a personal power that suggested an order and harmony; that order and harmony did not issue in passivity, it issued in vitality and radiant feeling, leading us at least subconsciously to draw the conclusion that here was an individual who was living in accordance with divine law, who embodied the result of that accordance.

Now it seems to me the Pope had to act out the fullness, the absoluteness of what he represents: there is a Creator who does not adjust himself to the changing liberalizing trends of modern man; this God has proclaimed certain divine laws to preserve the integrity of man's soul. For the Pope to compromise these revealed truths is tantamount to denying to us the credibility of there being some absolute reference point in the universe.

This, then, is the message of the Pope. He has expressed an openness to other religions and his personal ambience suggests he is not as fixedly obdurate about these other matters as his doctrinal pronouncements seem to suggest. But he knows the great mass of people need to hear the enunciation of simple absolutes, particularly in the context of his own ability to trigger off the bliss that is the irrational element of all religious experience. — Robin W. Carlsen, 1225 Sunnyside Avenue.

High prices

I don't write to the newspapers often but I felt I had to say something about a report I heard the other day that the lowest food prices are here on the Island.

I drove up to Manson Creek three weeks ago and compared prices all the way up and back. I found the food prices with the exception of Manson Creek which is 120 miles north of Fort St. James, considering the long freight haul and conditions, not too much higher than here in Victoria with all the food processors, manufacturers around us. In fact, I bought toothpastes etc. in one variety store in Prince George and found the prices lower than here. One item I bought was 70 cents cheaper than what I had paid here the month previously for the same make.

That so-called report is just to justify the exorbitant prices we are forced to pay for everything on the Lower Mainland and in Victoria. — Lizette Hall, 1595 Sheridan Avenue.

Whose tactics?

With all that has been written, heard and seen on television during the past few weeks regarding the Socred "Lettergate", one is rather reluctant to add more to the mounting verbiage. However, one of the elements in this saga which has prompted me to get into the fray is remarks made by the mentor of these phoney cowardly letter writers, the leader of the Social Credit party.

Upon his return from the Orient he feigned surprise and shock that such goings on had come to light in his absence. He even claimed disgust and shame that some members of his party should stoop so low as to perpetrate such dirty tricks. Let us take a look at Bennett's own record, well chronicled, prior to the May 10 election.

- The BCRIC five share give-away to try to make the people of B.C. think that they were getting a fair share of the resources of this province. Five shares does not give us a vote and the shares are getting into fewer and fewer hands. All the people of B.C. owned our resources before BCRIC, now they don't.
- A budget, brought down in early May, gave back some of the things that the Socreds had taken away during the previous three years.
- Two days later Bennett called an election almost coincident with the federal election.
- Bennett took 20 minutes of TV prime time to announce the election, during which he gave a most blatant election speech in very poor taste. The TV networks had allocated him five minutes.
- The B.C. Government News, loaded with Socred propaganda, was rushed through printing, perhaps after Bennett called the election, so that the taxpayers of B.C. would pay the shot.
- The harassment of Conservative candidates and their supporters before and during the election.

We could go on but the above is a pretty fair sample of Bennett and Socred tactics. Don't feel too badly, you fake letter writers, you have a long way to go to beat the master. The most distressing thought to come out of all this however is, why do some men crave power so badly? To serve the people? — W. Stott, 5-639 Constance Avenue.

Poor option

Re: Reversing the Trans Mountain Oil Pipeline.

Reversing the flow of the Trans Mountain oil pipeline would be bad for Canada; bad, especially, for B.C.

There is the possibility of oil spills from tankers coming into the Strait of Juan de Fuca. But international relations and energy supply economics are important as well. Canada should not have to rely on U.S. oil ports on both coasts, Atlantic and Pacific. Nor should we in B.C. be cut off from our supply of Alberta oil because tanker borne crude is available through the Trans Mountain system to refineries in the Vancouver area.

During the oil crisis of 1974 the Arab countries stopped their tanker movements to the United States. Shipment destined for Montreal were blocked because the Arabs would not allow their oil to be delivered to the Montreal pipeline terminal at Portland, Maine.

A tanker port in Washington state (across the Strait of Juan de Fuca from Victoria, B.C.) would be vulnerable for the same reasons. Imports of offshore oil entering Western Canada would not only be subject to U.S. laws but affected by U.S. foreign policy initiatives as well.

Then there's the question of Alberta oil moving westward over the Trans Mountain system to Vancouver. These movements could be cut off if (a) Canada's oil production continues to decline; (b) Ontario's needs continue to increase; and (c) B.C. could be supplied with offshore oil over a reversed Trans Mountain line originating in Washington State.

In order to process offshore oil heavy investments will have to be made in our Vancouver refineries. Amounting to more than $500 million they could add 10 cents a gallon to the cost of gasoline in British Columbia.

These are the reasons why I think that the Government of British Columbia should oppose the construction of a reverse Trans Mountain oil line ... one which not only relies on tanker born oil but which also could cut our oil supply ties with Alberta as well. — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

Spirit is there

Although personal considerations make it too difficult for me to be present at the next anti-Trident submarine demonstration, my spirit is with those who are.

Can it be possible that the people who design, plan, build and use these monsters feel no guilt that they are involved with weapons to destroy the world?

And which is the greater threat, communism, or the annihilation of all the life on this planet? Even if communism is dehumanizing, where there is life there is always hope.

And if we worked half as hard at providing food, shelter, clothing and education to the underprivileged as we do at military targets, the whole world would enjoy our standard of living, and better.

When will these people learn that freedom is obtained not by pointing bigger guns at others, but by cooperating with them? — Craig Carmichael, 820 Dunsmuir Road.

Predictions for the 1980s

OTTAWA — Most of our best and brightest economists, you'll be glad to hear, believe there's a fair to middling chance Canada will do fair to middling well, once we've got through this high interest rate nastiness.

A couple of them, you'll be sad to hear, believe that another depression although most improbable, is no longer impossible.

To mark the 50th anniversary of the last time that our economy flew apart, and which now has gone by without a stock market crash, although we did have a rather scary crunch, I asked six economists to peer into their crystal balls to survey our prospects to 1985.

The pessimist on the panel turned out to be McGill University economist Jack Weldon. "The unthinkable now has become the barely thinkable," says Weldon of a repeat depression.

Hero of the hour

The optimist was Tom Kierans, vice-chairman of the Toronto investment firm, McLeod, Young, Weir. He foresees a "fairly brisk" recovery beginning early next year, with Canada outperforming the U.S.

Although their views differed, all saw U.S. Federal Reserve Bank Chairman Paul Volcker, who is clamping down on credit, as the hero of the hour. "Everything depends upon whether Volcker succeeds, and is allowed to succeed. It's really as simple as that," says Carl Beigie, head of the C.D. Howe Research Institute.

Each panel member assessed the chances for these alternate scenarios unfolding by 1985: A depression; hyper-inflation (that's when wheelbarrows replace wallets); stagflation (continued high unemployment and inflation); reasonable recovery. None foresaw a boom. Here are their views:

Beigie. No depression — "because of the built-in stabilizers (such as social security)." Hyper-inflation isn't likely, but just might engulf us, because of "the inflation psychology," and because of "the widespread notion that governments can't, or won't, deal with inflation."

Recovery is a better bet than stagflation, but only barely. Volcker, "provided he doesn't get dumped," ought to be able to wrestle inflation to the ground. Even if recovery does come, though, "it won't really be with us for another five years."

PAUL VOLCKER
. . .needs a free reign.

Simon Reisman, former deputy minister of Finance. His views are similar, except that he believes Volcker will be able to keep the fiscal faith. "President Carter is just too weak to dump him, even if he wanted to.

Stagflation won't stay with us, says Reisman, "because it's inherently unstable. Either we'll get inflation down to five per cent say in three or four years, and I believe Volcker and (Governor of the Bank of Canada Gerald) Bouey will, or it'll run away from us."

The price of this victory, though, will be a long recession. "It could last a year, a year and a half even." Recovery thereafter "won't be anything dramatic, but a bit better than the U.S."

Bill Mackness, vice-president, Toronto investment firm, Pitfield, Mackay, Ross. He sees neither depression nor hyper-inflation in sight, but no recovery either.

"I just don't believe that the U.S. government will be able to kick the money-printing habit for long enough — the Canadian government may turn out to be quite a bit tougher — to really deal with inflation."

Mackness foresees, therefore, "five more years of inflation." To end it will require, "a fundamental change in North American economic policy," and before that happens, "there'll be a lot of political to-ing and fro-ing."

Weldon. He's gloomier still. Either a depression or hyper-inflation, now are "barely thinkable." He worries that, "public behavior has become so perverse that the ability of monetary authorities to shock us into change has almost vanished." He worries as well at "the dwindling away of the government's ability to deliver any policy."

Ahead, "as far as I can see," Weldon foresees stagflation. "There's nothing in sight that could bring us to recovery within that time (1985)."

Sylvia Ostry, Economic Council of Canada. She's more bullish, but doesn't entirely rule out — "It's a low probability, but not a zero one" — either a depression or hyper-inflation. These "system break-downs" could happen because of uncontrollable events — another Iran, or a collapse of the international monetary system, caused, for example by a repayments failure by Third World countries.

Bull in bunch

More likely, says Ostry, is a recovery. We'll endure a "poor performance" in the early '80s, but then our showing should improve to "quite respectable."

Kierans. He, to finish on a high note, is the bull in the bunch. No depression nor hyper-inflation. And end to stagflation, "provided Volcker is allowed to go on doing what he is doing."

Recovery, instead, is within reach. Quite soon. "It'll happen by March." And quite strong. "It'll be fairly brisk, say three to four per cent a year. We'll do better than the U.S., indeed our immediate prospects are superlative, because of our resources."

Take your pick among their opinions. You definitely should take seriously, though, their unanimous reply to the question (I didn't ask if of Ostry): "You win $10,000 on a lottery. What should you do with it?" Each, suddenly confident of his crystal ball advised: Stock it into short-term (30 to 180-day) deposits at the highest interest rate going.

Reversing pipeline has questionable benefits for B.C., says MLA.

United States of America vs. the Hell's Angels

We're an army, boasts outlaw chief

By CYNTHIA GORNEY
The Washington Post

"I just don't know what it is. I think we probably stand for what the majority of people would like to be. But they just, you know — maybe not what they would like to be, but maybe they have a vision that at least once, they'd like to just get on a motorcycle and roar down the street and somebody would sneer at them and they'd punch them in the nose."

Sonny, you are 41 years old. You cannot go around punching people's lights out just because they gouged the finish on your Harley.

"You can if they laugh about it after they do it."

Why?

"Why?"

The voice is incredulous.

"That's my motorcycle."

Aging, mustached, big-shouldered, quiet, they rose one by one in the San Francisco Federal courtroom to present themselves.

Ralph Hubert Barger Jr., AKA "Sonny," certified American outlaw, enduring god of biker mythology, the face wide and weathered by prison and the wind.

Albert Lee Perryman, AKA "Big Al," bearded, ponytailed, a tattoo up both massive arms, ponderous belly sagging over his blue jeans.

John Thomas Palomar, AKA "Johnny Angel," AKA "Johnny A," shiny black hair tangled loose down his broad back. Richard Gleen Motley, AKA "Rick the Bat," balding and scrubbed and stocky inside his blue patterned shirt. The illuminated ceiling arched high over their heads and from across the room the jurors watched them stand and sit, stand and sit, stand and sit.

'Take it home'

Sam Conti, the presiding U.S. District Court Judge, ordered a photograph made of the defendants' seating area.

Sonny Barger hid his head behind a binder.

"Take that down," Conti said.

Barger took it down and turned his head away.

"Face forward," Conti said.

"I don't want my picture taken," Barger said, voice low.

The camera flashed.

"Well, you've just gotten your picture taken," Conti said.

"Great," Barger said. "Take it home with you."

And that was how the curtain rose on The United States of America vs. Ralph Hubert Barger Jr. et al. in the single biggest effort in U.S. history to put away leaders of the world's most famous motorcycle club. "Motorcycle club" is the government's term, as well as the Angels'; it appears numerous times, with its odd Sunday outing jolliness, in the federal grand jury indictment that charges 32 Hell's Angels members and associates with felonies collectively and individually that go on for 45 neatly typewritten pages.

Among the accusations against various of the 32 are charges of manufacturing and distributing methamphetamine; of conspiring to kill, assault, use false identification, intimidate, wiretap, bribe, and in general using "any means necessary to ensure the conspiracy's continuing existence and success."

They are accused, based on crimes and alleged crimes that go back as far as 1971, of violating a federal statute called the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), which was adopted nine years ago to give prosecutors what was supposed to be a new tool for dismantling organized crime. Ralph Hubert Barger is described as "the Godfather" and James "Jim Jim" Brandes is described as having "told witnesses that he has murdered at least eight to 10 people" and Sergey "Sir Gay" Walton is described as having "recently told another individual, 'The Feds can have the other 49 states — California is mine.' "

They are accused, in short, of having matured from exuberant, unwashed brawlers into great big grown-up hoods.

"This is in essence taking his whole life, everything that he's ever done," says Frank Mangan, the slight blond San Jose attorney who is defending Sonny Barger, "and everything bad 31 people have ever done, and throwing it all out in front of a jury. If they don't get him on this case, maybe they'll leave him alone."

There are 18 defendants (not every one named in the indictment has been located), 18 defence attorneys, four federal prosecutors, 12 jurors, four alternate jurors, and a bulletproof, plexiglass enclosed courtroom — specially remodeled at a cost of $15,000 — to hold them all. There are three tiers of crowded desks for the defendants and their attorneys. Nameplates label the defendants, like guests at a dinner party. MUSICK. STEFANSON. SOLANO. BARGER. There are loose-leaf black binders containing the defendants' photographs and blank papers for notes, so the jurors can keep things straight. And in the spectator area behind the plexiglass, elbow to elbow with the wives and girlfriends and curious passers-by, shaggy bearded men with tattooed arms and sleeveless death's head vests sit grim, muttering, watching.

"I can tell you why they want to get rid of the Hell's Angels, what I think," Barger says.

He is smoking a cigarette, and wearing an orange prison jumpsuit with green rubber thongs. It is early evening in the San Francisco county jail, where Sonny Barger is being held on $1 million bail.

"First of all we're a virtual army. We're all across the country, and now we're in foreign countries also. And they have no idea how many of us there are . . . We have money, many allies that are outlaw bikers that are not Hell's Angels, that would probably do anything we asked them to, if something happened."

Something like what?

"Well, maybe like a revolution. Or anything like that. They know we're basically the most probably well-armed people in the United States. We've never took a political stance on anything other than that one time against the V.D.C. (The Vietnam Day Committee, whose 1965 antiwar parade was broken up by Hell's Angels in Oakland), and at that time I thought we were right, but I've done 180 degrees on that since . . . and I think that scares the authorities. This untold number of people that really have no fear of dying for what they believe in. And they're armed. And they won't commit themselves to one side or the other. And I think that's where it lies."

Tight security

It has become, of course, The Hell's Angels Case — despite prosecutors' insistence that they are not out to "get" the Hell's Angels or destroy the club. There are three banks of elevators in the San Francisco federal building, and the only one with its own guards and metal detector is the bank that hits Judge Conti's courtroom on the 19th floor. Defence attorneys keep speaking of freedom of association, of anti-Angel media hype, of police harassment (six months before the indictment, one of the current defence attorneys filed a $3-million damage suit against northern California police and prosecutors, charging "official harassment and intimidation" of Hell's Angels). And at the same time there are law enforcement people who will tell you, with some resignation, that nothing — including mass jailings — could make these boys clean up their act. "The nicest thing I have heard anybody say about the Hell's Angels was said to me by the police chief in Cloverdale," says the district attorney in a northern California town where three corpses were found stuffed into the ranch well of a former Angel seven years ago. "He said, 'If you find the Angels at the south end of town, and you give them a police escort to the north end of town, they won't kill anybody on the way.'"

They were bad, at first, the way the Rolling Stones were bad, in those early days of gut-thumping antithesis to the Beatles: smirking, slouching, simian, but they don't wash their hair, mesmerizing in their sheer nastiness. Hell's Angels: Death and Satan. Leather armored brass-kunckle oleo-hair gutter-voice beer-bellied bust-em-up outlaws, roaring downwind with the great wild noise that adulthood was supposed to shake out of you. It was at least symbolically apropos that they began in the West, latching onto that terror of confinement that has become, in America, an essentially Western myth: no station wagon; home-to-job packaging for these boys.

Even now, slapped with an indictment that includes, among its counts, conspiracy to murder and deal in explosives, attorney Morgan summons up the old Marlon Brando image of your passionate nonconformist, raging at routine:

"They are not normal citizens," he says. "They have a lot of things in common and they don't like 8-to-5 jobs and they don't like wearing suits and they don't like what I guess is your average lifestyle."

A rolling legend

They formed their motorcycle club in Southern California sometime around 1950, according to what histories exist. It is said that the original group was a collection of ex-World War II bomber pilots, but that is hard to prove: the only certainty by now is that they managed, over the next 20 years, to usher the Harley Davidson into the ranks of rolling national legends. Sonny Hager once told an interviewer that he had been hired by movie people to read motorcycle scripts for accuracy.

They rambled in packs through the western states. You could scan California newspapers for the first few years of the 1960s and find Angels stomping around the headlines almost every month.

August 1962: "Guns roared and bottles flew in Niles Canyon early yesterday, with three Livermore carpenters pitted against about 50 members of the Hell's Angels motorcycle club." September 1964: "A massed array of police on the Monterey Peninsula — armed for a riot — ordered 300 "Hell's Angels' motorcyclists out of Monterey County yesterday."

November 1964: "A 36-year-old widow and mother of seven children said yesterday she had received two telephone calls threatening her life if she signed complaints against "15 or 20" Hells Angels who allegedly raped her early Saturday."

They wore swastikas and boots and spat fashionably on authority in general, a sort of Nazi-bedecked counterpoint to the summer of love. ("Call it contempt or call it hate," one Angel was quoted as announcing to a local paper, "it's the same thing. I'm not buying what's going on in society.") And it peaked, in the public eye, at Altamont, that metaphor for everything gone sour, with Jagger up there prancing "Sympathy for the Devil" into its giddy fascist madness while an 18-year-old black kid named Meredith Hunter got kicked, stomped, and stabbed to death in the centre of a small group of irritated Hell's Angels. One Angel was later tried for the murder, but he was acquitted; the evidence showed Hunter had drawn a gun, and the Angels, after all, had been hired as bodyguards.

It is the position of the United States government that various members of the Hell's Angels, acting together and using the Angels' name and resources, turned in the last 10 years to drug production and distribution that was efficient, thorough, and, when necessary, violent. These Angels laundered their drug money, the government says, through Bay Area catering businesses (the kind that bring food to factories).

Their financial holdings are so extensive, prosecutors declared in a memo requesting high bail for the defendants, that "enormous resources from over 40 known chapters all over the world will be available to the defendants for bond. Additionally, evidence has been gathered that at least the Oakland chapter (12 of the defendants are currently members of the Oakland chapter) maintains bank accounts in Switzerland and that a member from a chapter in England couriers the money from California to Switzerland.";

The anatomy of that alleged transformation is in part the stuff of this trial. It is expected to last four months, and among the government's witnesses will be 15 or 20 persons described by prosecuutors as "insiders." Their names are being withheld, according to the high bail memo, "due to the Hell's Angels prior record of killing and intimidating witnesses."

Sonny Barger: Are you a thug?

"A thug?" Barger looks thoughtful: "Probably a hoodlum. I don't know about a thug."

He leans forward, arms on the visiting room table: "See, the one thing that the police and everybody fail to say, when they charge us with these so-called, uh, what do we call it, heinous crimes against society . . . they refuse to admit that there is more than one society here. You know? There's the lower class element, I guess you would call it, or the criminal society, or the people on the fringes of it. And then there's what you would call the normal society . . .

"And the majority of people that have been hurt by Hell's Angels, you know — the majority of people involved in any crime that was against them by a Hell's Angel — has been somebody in the same element that we're in.

"What I'm saying," Barger says, "is we don't go out and attack society. The only citizens that ever get hurt by us come to us looking for trouble."

Ralph Hubert Barger: born 1938, Modesto, Calif., the son of a railroad worker, raised by his father and grandmother, quit school after the ninth grade, joined the Army in 1955, completed basic training and advanced infantry training, discharged honorably after 13 months. Convicted at various times of narcotics possession, assault with a deadly weapon, and possession of a firearm by a felon; in 1973, sent to Folsom Prison, where he served 3½ years for possession of heroin for sale.

"They tried to paint us as rowdies, you know, we're sort of against society, or whatever, just drink beer and tough guys that didn't get along with anybody. And when that didn't work, it changed to marijuana-smoking, crazed, you know. And when that didn't work, then it became drug dealing . . . They need something to go after that's visible. And we're a highly visible group."

Tombstone tattoo

Barger is relaxed, conversational: He has a thick brown mustache, sturdy fingers, lines across his forehead, weightlifter's build. When he talks he tugs softly at his moustache, or laces his fingers across his chest. His right arm is tattooed with a cross-shaped tombstone marked BARGER — in memory of his first wife, who died at 24, he has said, from a botched abortion. The left arm's tattoo is a snake around a dagger, deep green. "That's my army tattoo, U.S. Infantry," he says. "Dishonor before death."

What did he think he would be like at 40?

"I never thought I'd live to 40," Barger says. "To me, when I was 20 years old, 40 years old was just an age that, you know, when you got that old you should have been dead."

He had never met a happy 40-year-old?

"Not many," Barger says. "Those I knew that were 40 were all sitting home, easing home from work, eating dinner, and going to bed."

And what precisely makes that so awful?

"Because you didn't have a chance to have any fun."

No fun at all?

"Not the kind of fun I'm talking about. A lack of responsibility. That you can pick up and go, any time you want to go . . . like if you come home at night and your friend says, 'Well, hell, I'm gonna ride down to L.A. at night,' you want to go, and you just say. 'I can't, I got a wife and two kids I got to support, and I got the house payment I got to make, and blah blah' — over, 'Okay, let's go!' "

It is suggested that if everybody ran around punching out everybody else, and declining socially defined adulthood, things might fall apart in a fairly major way.

"So what?" Barger says.

"I don't think the Hell's Angels ever envisioned the rest of society behaving the way they do," says Margan from the other side of the table.

"The authorities in society are the biggest liars," Barger says. "The police department beats people up all the time, the prisons beat people up and kill people all the time, everybody's doing all kinds of things like this at all times, and even though we're a very, very, very dinky part of the whole, our percentage per amount of people, we probably are involved in less of that than society on the whole."

"I think," Barger says slowly, in his low, almost gravelly voice, "that this is probably the most important case that's ever come down in the history of the United States. Because it's a mass criminal trial. And they're not trying anybody for what they did per se. They're trying everybody for what everybody done, even though the majority of us have already been to prison for what we done.

"And if that's what's happening, if that's the way they're going to do it from now on, we might as well go to prison," Barger says. "We could have more fun in prison than we can on the streets, if this is what's happening."

Quebec white paper calls for 'treaty' with Canada

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec's white paper on sovereignty-association, La Nouvelle Entente Quebec-Canada, Quebec-Canada: A New Deal, was tabled today in the Quebec national assembly.

In its 109 pages, the white paper expands on the Parti Quebecois proposals adopted last June at a party convention, calling for a treaty arrangement between Quebec and Canada to replace Confederation.

The aim of the treaty would be "to maintain the present Canadian economic entity by ensuring continuity of exchange and by favoring, in the long run, a more rapid and better balanced development of each of the two partners."

It calls next spring's referendum on sovereignty-association "a historic rendezvous," that will give Quebecers a chance to decide their future "after mature reflection."

"For the government of Quebec has reached the conclusion that our development as a people requires the transformation of today's federalism into an association in which Quebec as part of an economic and monetary union, would have all the powers of a sovereign country, just like Canada."

The white paper opens with a preface entitled: The Future of the People, and closes with a message from Premier Rene Levesque under the heading: A Call to the People.

Its first chapter reviews the history of Quebec from the early days of French settlement through to the British conquest. It describes previous forms of government from the first assembly in 1791 until Confederation.

One opponent of Confederation called it a "fool's bargain," the paper notes. "As for the population, its wishes will never be known since the Quebec refused to consult it in a referendum."

Attempts to place English and French Canadians on an equal footing, were made, it acknowledges, but they failed.

As Quebec experiences a new vitality "the centralizing federal government dating from 1867 is still systematically trying to contain" Quebec's aspirations.

The next two chapters describe the effects federalism has had on Quebec and the failure to reach an agreement for constitutional change.

Chapter four outlines the 'New Deal' and chapter five presents the referendum as a way out for Quebec. The sixth and final chapter glowing describes the resources and potential of Quebec.

Highlights of the white paper include:

— All powers now with the federal government would be transferred to Quebec;

— Quebec's national assembly would have exclusive power to make all laws and levy all taxes on Quebec territory like any independent state;

— Quebec would remain a member of NATO and NORAD and abide by St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty;

— All Canadians living in Quebec would have right to Quebec citizenship with a separate Quebec passport;

— Quebec would offer to negotiate with the rest of Canada maintenance of "the present Canadian economic entity;"

— Movement of people, goods and capital would remain and the Canadian dollar would be the common currency;

— An independent Quebec and the rest of Canada would set up four institutions to run the proposed economic community between them;

— The community would include a council, a commission of experts, a court of justice and a central monetary authority.

— The referendum on sovereignty-association will take place next May or June and the question will require a simple "yes" or "no" reply;

— There would be no unilateral declaration of independence immediately after the referendum;

— The Quebec government would guarantee old age pensions, family allowances, veterans' pensions and direct subsidies to farmers during a transition period;

— Job security is guaranteed for all federal civil servants residing in Quebec who join the Quebec civil service after independence;

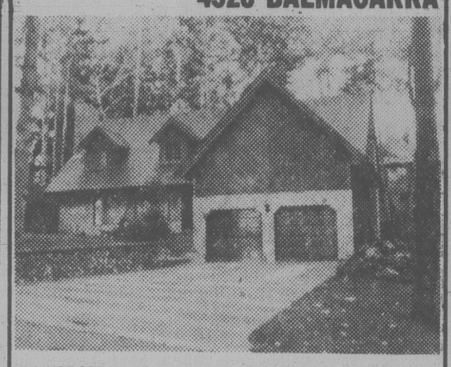

'Sombrero' trapping oil

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — A metal cone designed to trap most of the oil from the runaway Ixtoc I well is capturing at least 60 per cent of the crude from the worst-ever oil spill, officials say.

Spokesmen for the government oil monopoly Petroleos Mexicanos said Monday the 310-ton metal "sombrero," still being adjusted, was trapping some 6,000 barrels of oil a day, or 60 per cent of the estimated 10,000 barrels gushing daily.

FOR CANADA

The CF-16 Means Operational Quality, Lowest Cost, Program Maturity... and Extensive Economic Benefits for Canadian Industry.

The Canadian Government selected two aircraft as finalists in the New Fighter Aircraft competition. Four criteria were established for selection of the winner: Systems Quality; Life-Cycle Cost; Program Risk; and an Industrial Benefits Program. There are significant differences between these two aircraft in all four of these criteria.

Systems Quality

- The F-16 is the best air-to-air and air-to-ground fighter in the world.

- In the air-to-air mission, the F-16 can outmaneuver any other aircraft. It will carry a lethal mix of all-weather radar and infrared missiles for continental defence against bomber attack.

- In Canada's air-to-ground NATO mission, the CF-16 would join the F-16s of Belgium, Denmark, Norway, The Netherlands and the United States. While meeting the critical defence requirements of Western Europe, this multinational commonality would lead to enormous savings in logistics and support costs for taxpayers of Canada.

Life-Cycle Costs

- The F-16 has the lowest acquisition cost and operating cost of any modern, high-performance aircraft designed for first-line operation in the 1980's and beyond.

- With the funds available in Canada's New Fighter Aircraft budget, 36 more aircraft can be provided with the CF-16.

- If a fixed quantity of 130 aircraft is required, the CF-16 will save the Canadian taxpayers more than one-half billion dollars in initial purchase cost.

- A fleet of 130 CF-16 aircraft maintained at that level will save another one-half billion dollars in operating costs over a 25-year life span -- and will use 11 million gallons less fuel each year than will its competitor.

Program Risks

- The F-16 is now in operational service with three of Canada's allies and will be in operational service with three more in January 1980.

- The F-16's development is completed and its outstanding performance is well established.

- The F-16 worldwide production program is on schedule and on budget.

- At the time of Canada's planned delivery of its first New Fighter Aircraft, more than 700 F-16s will have been delivered to combat squadrons.

THERE ARE NO PROGRAM RISKS!

Industrial Benefits Program

- General Dynamics, its associates and subcontractors, have committed to a $2.8 billion industrial benefits program, including $1.1 billion in the important aerospace and electronic high-technology areas. ALL OF THIS WILL BE IN ADDITION TO FOLLOW-ON WORK ON PROGRAMS NOW BEING CARRIED OUT IN CANADA BY THESE COMPANIES.

- This Industrial Benefits Program is expected to provide 20,000 jobs for Canadian workers.

- This program is well defined and will provide significant benefits for every province.

By each and every one of the established criteria, the CF-16 is clearly superior!

Bill Holm at the helm . . . cranking

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Once you get used to Bill Holm's boat, it has a beauty all its own. And while traditionalists may wince, the sails on his 35-foot trimaran could be a harbinger of the future.

What makes the "tri" so unusual are two rigid, wing-like sails of fibreglass attached to a turntable atop the cabin. While rigid sails aren't a new idea, the craft was designed and built entirely by Holm. And it works, at least so far.

At the moment, the unusual boat is in a little creek inlet that runs into the backyard of his Sidney home (also built by Holm, as you might expect) while he finishes the interior.

The one time he took the boat out, breezes were about five knots and the boat moved well in the light airs. Then, for about 10 minutes, the wind rose to 10 knots.

How did the boat do?

"About six knots," Holm said, "and I couldn't complain about that."

Holm is anxious to give his boat a real test in a stiff blow, but in the meantime, the two sails "weathervane," their trailing edges following the wind, so that little direct force is exerted against them.

Holm built the boat so that he and his wife Daphne could sail well into their old age, without the usual need of older sailboat owners for a crew of young people to hoist and handle sails.

Holm, now 57 and retired, wants more independence than that.

The trimaran is the fourth he has built. He singlehanded the last one to Tahiti, a 4,500-mile jaunt. One leg of the trip was between San Diego and the Marquesas, a group of islands in the Pacific, and he was alone at sea for 40 days.

"It was a worthwhile experience," Holm said, but he has no intention of doing any deepsea sailing with his new craft.

While the first impression of the boat's sails is of aircraft wings on end, Holm points out that the rigid sails are symmetrical — both surfaces are curved — while an aircraft wing is flat on the bottom.

The sails are 20 feet high and about 14 feet wide at the base, closer to 16 feet with the trim tabs.

But the angle of attack of Holm's sails is employed in a different way than that of an aircraft wing.

He can change the angle of the sails in relation to the wind by turning a crank that turns a pulley arrangement that turns the whole turntable.

Electrical mechanisms control the trim tabs that resemble the ailerons on an aircraft wing.

One big attraction of the two fibreglass sails is their cost — they're much less expensive than a conventional rig.

The fact that he's not rich prompted Holm to be innovative in building his boat's hull too. He used a four-foot form to mould the whole hull.

A quiet man, Holm isn't anxious to have hordes of people over to see his craft. He has no commercial plans to market the design.

He simply wants to be able to head his boat for open water and enjoy marine mobility, with the wind as free power and his innovative sails making arduous sail raising unnecessary.

The acid test will come when he heads into open water off Roberts Point in a stiff blow.

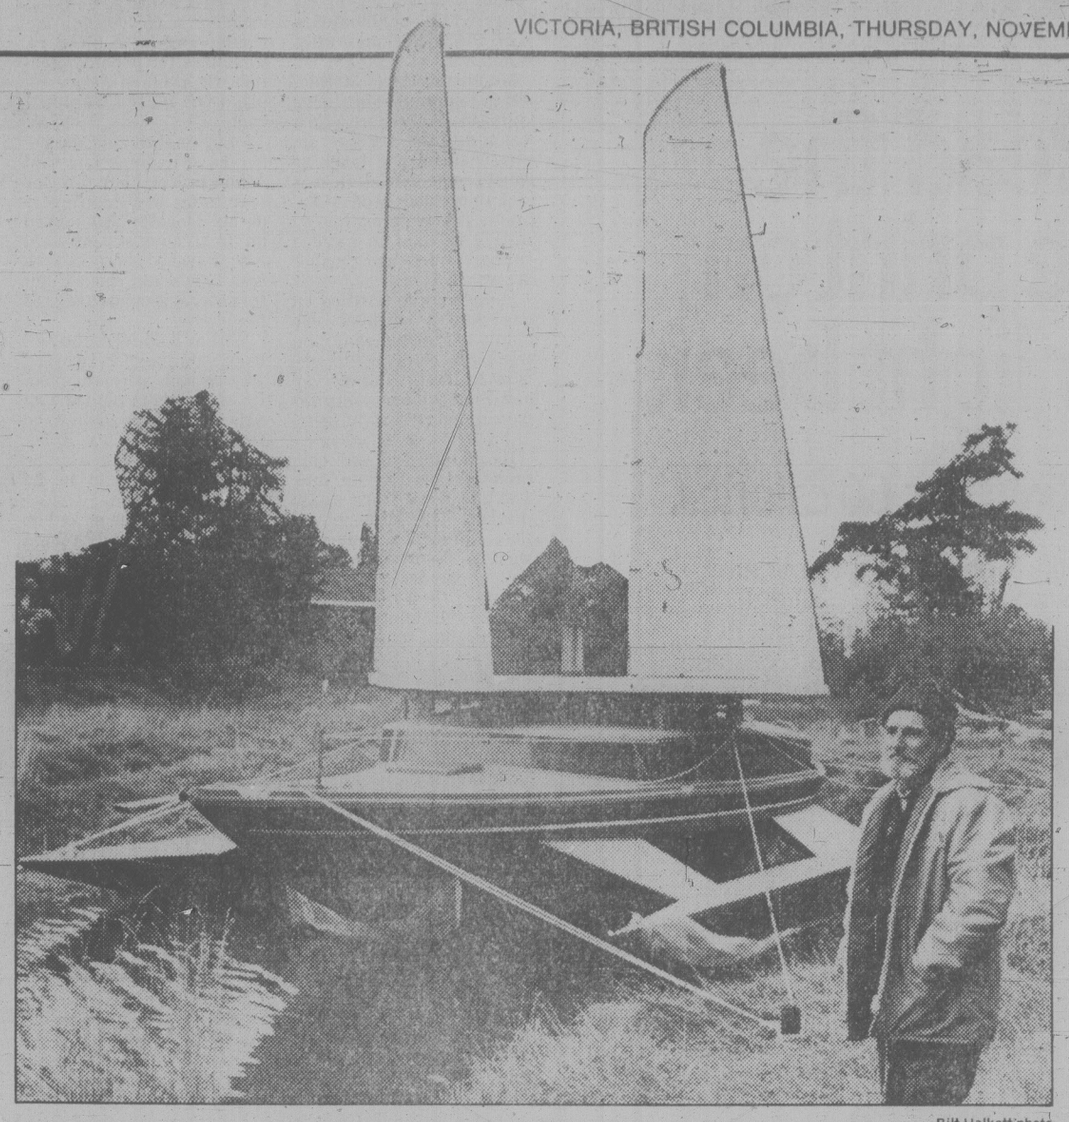

As one sailing buff pointed out, a conventional boat can do five knots under bare poles if the wind is strong enough.

And there are those horror stories about trimarans. The very stability afforded by a main hull and two pontoons works against a trimaran them in a blow.

Instead of heeling over and spilling wind from the sails as a regular sailboat does, a trimaran sits so stiffly that its mast snaps, or the sails rip, or the whole boat overturns.

Even Holm isn't sure what will happen when his craft encounters a blow. He stresses he is merely experimenting, and he makes no claims for his design.

Good luck, Bill.

Slush fund tipsters fear reprisal: Block

Saanich Ald. Irene Block said Wednesday she has received phone calls from people who say they have proof a slush fund exists for some aldermanic candidates in the municipality.

But she said her informants, who are employees for companies offering substantial financial aid to candidates, are afraid to step forward for fear of reprisals.

In one case the door of an employer's office was open and his secretary overheard a conversation about election contributions, Block said.

Block said she will support any municipal candidate making full disclosure of campaign funds before the Nov. 17 elections.

She claimed she is getting calls from all over Greater Victoria congratulating her for "flushing out" aldermen using a long-standing secret slush fund supplied by big business to finance their election campaigns.

Block has refused to name the aldermen involved or supply proof.

But she has refused to retract her allegation, made Friday during a panel discussion about women and politics at the University of Victoria.

The Municipal Act makes it an offence for any treat — even a beer — to be given to a voter by a candidate at an election, she said.

However, it is not a corrupt practice according to the act for speculators to provide $25,000 worth of signs, media ads and telephone service for a candidate's campaign.

"But every citizen should have an equal chance to influence council elections and thereafter council decisions," Block added.

"That will be possible only when mandatory public disclosure of campaign contributions reduces the flow of backing from venal sources.

"I am offering my support in this election to any candidate who will make such a disclosure prior to Nov. 17."

In June, 1978, Ald. Geoff Vantreight said he had received during the previous election about $225 from a business-sponsored election expenses fund that totaled not more than $5,000.

A group of pro-development candidates also got some money, according to Vantreight. He told the Times he didn't know how much, but said it wasn't a substantial amount.

Price increases on fuel oil, gas

A federal tax hike on fuel oil and gasoline effective today is expected to be passed along in a 1.1-cent a gallon rise at the pump.

The reason: A 35-cent a barrel federal tax increase on oil, equivalent to a quarter of a cent per litre or 1.1 cent a gallon on all kinds of petroleum fuel.

Some major dealers in Greater Victoria made the price adjustment this morning while others were awaiting instructions from regional offices.

One dealer said the increase will be effective today at every level because it is a federal tax, although Shell's Ontario retail marketing manager John McIntyre of Toronto, said it would be up to dealers to decide themselves, according to the competition.

The tax, which goes from 50 to 85 cents on every barrel of petroleum product sold in Canada, is used to compensate oil companies which buy crude at world prices but sell it here at reduced domestic prices.

The tax also subsidizes, in part, the two plants operating in the Alberta oil sands.

Christie can't run for council, judge rules

Lawyer Doug Christie won't be an aldermanic candidate in Victoria Nov. 17.

Christie lost a last-minute legal fight for the right to run Wednesday when Judge Harold Alder disallowed his appeal against his disqualification as a candidate in the city.

The appeal — heard in Victoria provincial court — was based on Christie's contention that he has no agreement or contract with the city in connection with a building he rented at 810 Courtney.

Returning officer Colin Crisp told Christie last Friday he was disqualified as a candidate because of his tenancy at 810 Courtney, property owned by the city.

In his appeal, based on Section 60 of the Municipal Act, Christie argued the agreement to rent the small building placed on a parking lot was with Paul Arsens of Paul's Motor Inn and, as such, made him a sub-tenant of Arsens'.

Christie told the court he first approached silversmith Gordon Drummond in June of this year after learning the building was available for rental.

Drummond, who occupied the building at that time, advised Christie that Arsens was the person to contact.

After talking to Arsens, Christie agreed to the $150 a month rent and began occupancy of the office space on July 1.

City solicitor Jacob De Villiers, acting for Crisp, produced a Nov. 20, 1973, agreement between the city and Arsens in which Arsens granted the city an option to purchase the property.

That option was to be exercised after Jan. 1, 1974, and on Jan. 16, 1974, was exercised by the city, De Villiers stated.

Following the city's purchase of the parking lot and building, De Villiers continued, Arsens, under the name of Paul's Restaurant's Ltd., would continue to operate the parking lot for the benefit of the city under a management agreement.

One of the clauses of the management agreement, De Villiers pointed out, was that Arsens would act as the city's agent in renting the shed on a monthly tenancy.

Arsens was to received a 20 per cent commission on gross cash revenue derived from the parking lot and shed. The agreement was signed by Arsens as president of Paul's Restaurants Ltd., and city clerk Morran Waller and Mayor Peter Pollen on behalf of the city.

Whether or not Arsens disclosed the fact to Christie that he was acting as an agent for the city when he rented the building to Christie was not material, De Villiers argued.

Christie, who said he was unaware of the agreement until Wednesday, pointed out the contract was between the city and Paul's Restaurants Ltd., not Arsens.

His rental agreement was with an individual, not an agent company.

Before handing down his decision, Alder asked rhetorically whether a candidate for public office in the city rented a space in the same property would be considered as holding a contract with the city.

Christie then asked if an alderman pays 25 cents to park in a city parkade would be considered as having a contract with the city.

Meanwhile, Greater Victoria school trustee Peter Yorke said Wednesday he is prepared to resign his unexpired term if he is elected to Victoria city council next month.

But there are obligations he feels he must fulfil on the school board well into the new year, including helping set a 1980 budget that could be higher by $5 million.

Yorke said he has a responsibility to voters to see the new budget through, particularly when new faces are expected on the board of trustees Jan. 1.

He said he also wants to see implemented programs in which he has a special interest, including new options for secondary school dropouts, and for facilities, grounds and upkeep.

In addition, he said, the administration is likely to bring in new proposals in the new year if trustees do not approve of additional teachers recommended in the preliminary budget. This also deserves his attention, Yorke said.

"I believe the voters think a person should only serve in one position," he said, promising if elected alderman to talk over his future with the new school board chairman trustees will choose after Nov. 17.

Yorke said his resignation from the board would be timed to be fair to the board and its needs, which logically would avoid the necessity of a byelection. If he serves to June no byelection would be necessary.

Constable denies assaulting Esquimalt man

A 34-year-old Esquimalt man accused a municipal policeman in county court Wednesday of assault causing bodily harm in an incident in the police station almost three years ago.

The accusation by Ronald Shingler was denied by Constable James Askew who pleaded not guilty and was to testify today.

The case, a private prosecution, was delayed for 1½ hours while technicalities over the indictment were sorted out.

Mr. Justice Harry McKay, a B.C. Supreme Court judge sitting in county court, said it was a disgrace the Dec. 19, 1976, incident had taken so long to come to trial. He was told there had been a Supreme Court hearing into an initial refusal to have a charge sworn and further delays since.

Shingler, who testified all day, said a neighbor who didn't get along with him frequently called police who marked the tires of his van and issued him tickets for parking more than 24 hours at his Drake Avenue home.

He and his wife and children went out Dec. 19, 1976, and the tires were again marked. After dropping off the children for skating, they went to his mother's where he had one drink of apricot brandy, then returned to pick up the children.

He decided to go to Esquimalt police to see if there had been a complaint about over-parking because his was the only vehicle marked and that had been common for months.

Shingler said he was told by Sgt. John Macdonald it was because of a letter sent by his lawyer to the police chief. He asked if he could complain about other cars and left.

Constable Askew then drove over. Shingler said he told him about the other vehicles and said Askew told him he wasn't going to be told how to do his job.

Shingler returned to the police station about 3 p.m. and as he started to talk to Macdonald, Askew came in and said a neighbor was so mad he could kill Shingler.

This was probably because he had complained about the neighbor over-parking, said Shingler, but he admitted later he had made a mistake complaining that the neighbor didn't have a valid vehicle inspection sticker.

Shingler said Askew asked him what would he do if the neighbor made good on the threat and he replied he would ask for police protection. He claimed Askew replied the police wouldn't come.

Shingler then said the police have to come and said Askew prodded him three or four times with his fingers on his shoulder. He backed up to a counter and said Askew grabbed his neck with both hands and choked him for several seconds and held him down.

When Askew stepped back, said Shingler, he asked why he had been assaulted. He said Askew replied that Shingler had raised his hand first and said he was drunk and if he didn't leave by the time he counted to 10, he would be arrested.

Shingler said he picked up a clipboard he had brought with him, asked several constables for their names, the number 10 was reached and Askew grabbed him, pushed his face down on the counter, handcuffed him tightly so his wrists hurt.

Shingler said he asked for a breathalyzer test, which was never given, and for the handcuffs to be relaxed, and was told by Askew that handcuffs are not made to be comfortable.

He said his wrists were cut from the pressure of the handcuffs and his throat slightly swollen.

Askew and Macdonald then escorted him to a police car and he was taken to the city police lockup and held until about 9:40 p.m. without being allowed to make a phone call and with Askew telling him there was no charge and that "they" would just sober him up.

Cross-examined by defence lawyer Robert Higinbotham, Shingler admitted to a number of inconsistencies between evidence at the preliminary hearing and a statement to his former lawyer Douglas Christie and testimony Wednesday.

Shingler agreed he had a piece of yellow chalk which he left in city cells "so other prisoners could write things on the walls" but he denied he marked his own vehicle's tires so he could make a complaint to police.

He was shown an affidavit in which he said "upon being" arrested by Askew he was informed he was being charged with being intoxicated in a public place. Shingler said that was an error, that he found out later from someone else about a charge, and that he never intentionally swore a false affidavit.

Shown another part of the affidavit, in which he said Askew threatened him with violence, Shingler told the court that Askew threatened him through another man, the owner of the van who was mad enough to kill him.

Shingler denied that Askew said only Macdonald was entitled to know why he wasn't marking tires, denied that Askew left the room in the police station and denied that he threw his hands in the air in a threatening gesture, then turned to face Askew.

He agreed he pulled his arm back quickly while being prodded but said he was leaning back from his shoulder and he had never raised his arm to a policeman in his life.

Office building approved

Saanich council has approved construction of a two-storey, 16,500 square foot office building at Shelbourne and Donnelly.

Council approved the third rezoning application by the property owners after a public hearing on Monday.

Before the judge

A 20-year-old city man found with a phoney driver's licence pleaded guilty Wednesday in provincial court to impersonation.

Judge Harold Alder remanded Robert Leslie Scott, 1111 Hillside, in custody until Nov. 16 so a pre-sentence report can be prepared.

Scott appeared before Alder on Tuesday and pleaded guilty to driving while suspended and driving without due care and attention. He was given a 30-day, intermittent sentence on the first count and a $50 fine on the second. Crown counsel Don Laughton said Scott was stopped in Esquimalt on Oct. 7 and he produced a driver's licence in the name of Isador Kormansek, which Scott later admitted he found that night in a beer parlor.

After his court appearance he was searched by police and another driver's licence in the name of Martin Stanley Fox was found in his coat pocket.

Laughton said Scott borrowed Fox' birth certificate and went to the motor-vehicle branch June 10, 1977, said he lost his licence, and obtained a photo-licence in order to get into licenced premises at the age of 17.

Two 19-year-olds charged with a break-in early Wednesday were released and remanded until next Wednesday for election of their trial method.

Victor Bruno Klapcic and Lindsay Stewart Thompson, both of 1720 Denman, were charged with breaking and entering Harpo's Cabaret, 15 Bastion Square. Thompson was also charged with escaping lawful custody.

Victoria city police were alerted by an alarm and saw two men leaving the cabaret at 4 a.m. with cases of beer.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Sybil Elliot Burns, 57, of 520 Falcon, $1,000; Roy Joseph Pottery, 49, of 1315 Topaz, $400; Peter Brent Mills, 27, of 1190 May, $400; John David Angus, 32, of 215 Gorge Road East, $400; Harold George Leask, 33, of Abbotsford, $400; and James Victor Young, 19, of Robinson Road in Sooke, $50.

In addition, Young was placed on one year's probation, ordered to perform 100 hours of community service work, and prohibited from driving until the work has been completed or six months, whichever came last.

Social workers meet Friday

The Victoria branch of the B.C. Association of Social Workers begins its three-day annual conference at The Empress Friday, this year focusing on helping children and their families through the school system.

The conference is co-sponsored by the social workers and Victoria school counsellors.

Guest speaker Friday night will be Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup who will discuss the expanding services available to parents and children through the school system.

Other problem areas to get some attention during the conference will be child abuse, family therapy, children's death concerns and how to handle them, as well as the difficulties working with young people with differences — colored, handicapped or retarded.

On Sunday, Ken Low, coordinator of action studies for the Calgary school board, will address the conference.

He will speak on the effects the school system has on students and what kind of survival skills it gives them.

10 left on list for chief

The list of candidates who have applied to be chief of the Victoria police force has been reduced to 10 by the selection committee, Mayor Mike Young said Wednesday at a meeting of the police board.

They are the top picks from a total of 37 law enforcement officers from across Canada who had applied up to the deadline of Oct. 1. The mayor said these will be further reduced to five.

Those on the short list will be called to Victoria for interviews the week of Nov. 19, when the new mayor and possibly some aldermen are to be added to the selection committee for the final choice.

Car sales defy interest hike: dealers

Interest rates have soared and so have new car sales in the Greater Victoria area.

Dealers say there is no sign of a slump although they are watching the market warily in view of their expensive overheads.

Reports from Toronto and Detroit are that sales are taking a downturn due to concern about gas prices and high interest rates.

But Victoria GM dealer Doug Sim said sales of new cars are as brisk as last year.

Gasoline is still viewed as somewhat of a bargain in Victoria, at least for anyone who travels in the U.S. where prices can range from $1 to $1.60 a gallon.

New large cars can deliver relatively high milage, he said. There is a trend away from older large cars.

Sales of new cars are brisk but there is a reluctance to buy heavy used cars because of low milage.

Small vehicles of any age are selling well along with new, large vehicles

In Detroit, some dealers were concerned about going broke because they are paying the parent company 16 per cent interest on their wholesale purchases.

Carter leads with crowd at his back

By BILL WALKER

An assortment of items culled from a pleasant fall afternoon on the ninth day of Sandown where the Capital City Turf Club is holding a 16-day thoroughbred meeting:

— The scramble for leading rider honors has moved into the battle-royal category with a new man in the lead after Wednesday's action and four others in a crowd at his heels.

— The race for leading trainer has also tightened up with a two-way tie for the top and the 1979 Exhibition Park champion threatening to make a late run for the title.

— On the track a new (well, at least not hitherto considered top calibre) performer may have been discovered hiding in the lower claiming ranks.

— And, from a club viewpoint, the battle for the mutuel dollar took an upswing which has to be a turn for the better.

Now to the details.

Jockey Garth Carter, the 1975 Sandown riding champion, had three winners to run his total for the meeting to 11 and that gives him a lead of one over defending champion Mark Walker and Andy Smith.

Carter was up on Majormagicette ($4.90) in the first, Allshot Toheck ($9.10) in the second and Fly Bumps ($5.80) in the eighth.

Smith had one winner, a wire-to-wire performance on Captain Cognac ($6.60) in the third while Walker, who went into the day with the lead, took off all mounts after the first race because of a minor muscle pull.

Meanwhile, moving up and threatening, Joel Mena and Gary Melanson each had two winners and now have eight for the meeting and are just three back. And lest they falter, in the wings are Chad Hoverson and Travis Wilkinson each with six. Pat Owen has five.

Mena had the mount on Oscar Valentine ($6.70) in the fourth for that gelding's second straight win, and Mr. Giff ($3.30) in the fifth, also a second straight triumph. Melanson was up on Zac Zac ($5.80) in the sixth and Patient Echo ($9.40), which he picked up when Walker booked off, in the seventh.

John Timpany made his move in the trainer standings by saddling two winners, Majormagicette and Fly Bumps, to tie Len Lucas at the top with six. Meanwhile, Wayne Isbister, who led all trainers at Ex-Park with 55, got his fourth here with Patient Echo to tie Don Hannah for third place with several others close by.

The modest new hero of the piece is Mr. Giff, a four-year old Kentucky Bred, who won his second race here, this one at the $2,500 claiming level. But the way he won it indicates he likely won't run that low again — not here, at any rate. Mr Giff was timed in 1:21, the third best time of the meeting for 6½ furlongs.

As for the mutuel handle, the life-blood of the meeting, it was $122,894, up $18,174 from last Wednesday. And, with what appears to be a contentious field for the Vancouver Island Derby, Saturday, and a card which includes two other invitational handicaps, expectations naturally are brighter than they previously were.

Weights assigned for the derby are: C. Leave 116, Gallant Purchase 119, Sultan's Command 114, Garfield 115, Our Soldier 110, Power Cell 123, Shy Shot 111 and True Multi 112.

Hanlon's call was for calm

Times News Services

When Glen Hanlon called a timeout in the middle of the second period, he not only surprised his Vancouver Canuck teammates, he totally confused the rival New York Islanders.

The National Hockey League legislated 30-second timeouts a year ago and coaches invariably have used them near the end of the game. Vancouver could have used the break during the last hectic moments of Wednesday night's 2-2 tie with the Islanders, but Hanlon had used up Vancouver's allotment of one.

"I just lost my concentration out there and Harry (coach Harry Neale) has told me to call a timeout if I feel I need time to get things together again," Hanlon said after the game. "I feel like a new man after I talk to Harry and that little break got me back on my game. I just simmered down."

Hanlon was brilliant the rest of the game and finished with 22 saves, including 13 in the final period when the powerful Islanders dominated play. The 22-year-old netminder robbed both Mike Bossy and Bryan Trottier twice, and also had help from some friendly goal posts as the Islanders hit six during the game.

"It seems in this game that the harder you work, the luckier you get," Hanlon said about the posts. "Some nights those shots go into the net off the post, but tonight we were all working hard and we got a few breaks we needed."

The tie extended unbeaten strings for both teams, the Islanders to five games and the Canucks to four. Vancouver is in first place in the Smythe Division, two points ahead of St. Louis Blues, Chicago Black Hawks and Winnipeg Jets, while the Islanders remain in third spot in the Patrick Division, a point back of Atlanta Flames.

Jere Gillis and Stan Smyl scored the Vancouver goals, both on power plays, while Islander marksmen were Garry Howatt and Steve Tambellini before 12,734 Pacific Coliseum fans.

Coach Al Arbour of the Islanders was happy with the performance of his team, specially captain Dennis Potvin, who played his first game of the season on defence after missing eight starts because of a shoulder injury.

At Pittsburgh, the ticket-takers weren't taking any tickets. At Chicago the goaltenders weren't allowing any goals.

And at Toronto, the crowd rose to salute the return of an old favorite as Dave Keon scored a goal and set up another in Hartford Whalers' 4-2 victory over the Maple Leafs.

Despite a strike by service employees at the Civic Arena in Pittsburgh which limited attendance to a meagre 4,173, the Penguins broke out of a three-game losing streak to defeat Colorado Rockies 4-2.

At Chicago, Tony Esposito of the Black Hawks and Bob Sauve of Buffalo Sabres dominated proceedings in the first scoreless tie of the season. It was the 70th career shutout for the Chicago veteran and Sauve's second in as many starts.

In other games Wednesday, Minnesota North Stars defeated Detroit Red Wings 5-3 and Winnipeg downed Quebec Nordiques 4-2.

After calling off last Saturday's game against Philadelphia Flyers because of the strike, Pittsburgh management personnel manned the box office, the ice-scraping machine and a few concession stands.

Collegiate squads have national theme

All six teams competing in the Canadian intercollegiate women's field hockey championship tournament, which started today at the University of Victoria's McCoy Field, have bit of national team flavoring.

University of Victoria Vikings boast three members of the national side — Rita Bruneski, Lynne Beacroft and Mary Cavin. Assistant-coach Jan Crook also plays for Canada.

York University Yeowomen also have three nationals in the lineup — Laurie Lambert, Laura Branchaud and Sheila Forshaw.

University of Alberta Pandas have Nancy McCutcheon and Jean Mustard, University of Manitoba boasts Paula Parks and Connie Laliberte, University of Toronto Blues contain Donna Allaby and Jean Gourlay and University of Dalhousie Tigers have Pam Taylor on tap.

Action in the round-robin tourney continues starting at 8:15 a.m. Friday and Saturday with the final scheduled for 11:30 p.m. Sunday.

Hawks put an end to Philadelphia run

By The Canadian Press

Philadelphia '76ers lost the battle of the boards, the game and their status as the National Basketball Association's only undefeated team fell Wednesday night in Atlanta.

"The big key was what they did against us on the boards, if I can isolate one area of their strength," '76ers coach Billy Cunningham said after the Hawks' 102-97 victory broke his team's eight-game winning streak.

Elsewhere, Washington Bullets defeated Cleveland Cavaliers 114-105, Golden State Warriors beat Portland Trail Blazers 111-106, San Antonio Spurs defeated San Diego Clippers 130-123, Indiana Pacers downed Houston Rockets 133-129, Seattle SuperSonics dumped Denver Nuggets 97-89, Boston Celtics humbled New Jersey Nets 116-79, Milwaukee Bucks edged Los Angeles Lakers 110-106 and Kansas City Kings blasted Utah Jazz 125-108.

"We went after them," said Hawks coach Hubie Brown. "We fought them on the boards. Down the stretch, the big, big baskets were by John Drew. It was one of his all-time great games."

Drew's game was only 23 minutes long, but the small forward got 23 points and seven rebounds. Dan Roundfield led the Hawks in rebounding with 13 and Wayne Rollins had 11.

Drew caught three fouls in 18 seconds of the first period and sat out the final 3:31 and the entire second period. Jack Givens replaced him and scored 16 points.

"This is the first team that has outrebounded us," said '76ers star Julius Erving, who was the game's top scorer with 26 points. "Their offensive rebounds made the difference."

The game was delayed 31 minutes, with the '76ers ahead 3-2, while a wet floor was dried. The moisture came seeping up from the hockey ice below the boards and had to be mopped up during every timeout and at halftime.

Bobby Dandridge, who missed four games recently with a sprained ankle, scored 14 of his game-high 31 points in the fourth quarter to spark the injury-plagued Bullets.

Forward Purvis Short scored 37 points, including 17 in the final six minutes, as Golden State handed Portland just its second loss after nine straight wins and became the first team to score 100 points against the Blazers during the current campaign.

Fred Brown came off the bench for a season-high 19 points to lead Seattle past Denver. Brown scored 10 points in the fourth quarter as Seattle, 5-5, overcame a 76-71 deficit at the three-quarter mark. David Thompson led Denver with 19, and centre Dan Issel added 18. Centre Jack Sikma had 18 points for the Sonics.

Tough exhibitions on UVic schedule

University of Victoria Vikings face a pair of tough opponents in exhibition basketball action this weekend while preparing for the start of play in the Canada West University Athletic Association men's league.

First off, Vikings tackle the University of British Columbia, one of their CWUAA rivals, at 1:30 Friday in the McKinnon Gymnasium.

And the second opponent promises to be even tougher.

Vikings face Athletes in Action, an evangelistic squad who defeated top-ranked Russia last winter, in an 8:30 p.m. start Saturday.

Composed mainly of U.S. college grads, the Athletes spend their summers at a base in the Fraser Valley and go on tour during the winter.

The club, which went 32-3 in the 1977-78 season, is planning a tour of Europe and the Soviet Union after campaigning in Canada.

Last year, Vikings came close to beating the highly-rated Athletes. The touring club edged Vikings 105-98.

"They don't do a lot on defence and their offensive patterns are simple," said Viking coach Ken Sheilds after watching a videotape of last year's encounter.

"But we'll be at a disadvantage. AIA is a team of highly-disciplined athletes and their season is already well underway. We're just getting started," he added.

Alberta's champions test JBAA

Rugby fans in the Greater Victoria area are in for an exhibition treat this weekend.

Calgary Irish, a club which is only eight years old and now holds both the first and second-division Alberta championships, faces defending Canadian-champion James Bay Athletic Association in a first division tussle at 2:30 p.m. Saturday at Macdonald Park.

The second-division sides also clash at 1 p.m.

Calgaruy finishes off its visit with an first division exhibition against University of Victoria Vikings at 12:30 p.m. Sunday at Centennial Stadium.

Volleyball tourney

Some of the top men's and women's volleyball squads in Canada will be on hand for the annual University of Victoria Fall Tournament starting Friday.

Vancouver Old-Time Ladies, ranked No. 1 nationally, will join Canadian intercollegiate champion University of British Columbia Thunderettes, UBC Jayvees, Canadian juvenile champion Victoria "Y", Victoria Spice, Victoria Bayou and UVic Vikettes in the women's competition.

In the men's contest, B.C. Olympics of Vancouver, UBC Thunderbirds, Simon Fraser Clansmen, Vancouver Volleyball Club, Vancouver Old-Time Men, Victoria Far West Slammers, Victoria Scorpions will compete along with UVic Vikings.

Action in the tourney opens at 7 p.m. Friday and resumes at 9 a.m. Saturday, with the women's final at 4 p.m. and the men's final at 6 p.m.

Kison prepared to enter auction

NEW YORK (AP) — At least 43 major league players will be available for claim at Friday's baseball re-entry draft — the free-agent auction that often creates instant millionaires.

The list is headed by Nolan Ryan, California Angels' flame-throwing righthander, and includes a host of familiar names.

Besides Ryan, some of the pitchers who have declared for the draft are Fred Norman of Cincinnati Reds, Al Hrabosky of Kansas City Royals, Don Stanhouse of Baltimore Orioles, Rick Wise of Cleveland Indians, Dave Goltz of Minnesota Twins, Lerrin LaGrow of Los Angeles Dodgers, Rudy May of Montreal Expos and John Curtis of San Francisco Giants.

Pittsburgh Priates' Bruce Kison says he may be added to the list.

Kison said he'll test the re-entry draft Friday if he can't reach contract agreement with the World Series champions.

Kison and his agent, Tom Reich, met Wednesday with Pirates president Dan Galbreath and vice-president Harding Peterson. Another meeting was set for today.

"The next move is up to the Pirates," Kison said. "I definitely would prefer to stay in Pittsburgh."

Kison was 13-9 last season with a 4-0 record in September during the Pirates' drive to the National League East title.

Other players up for grabs include Bob Watson of Boston Red Sox, Tony Perez of the Expos, Joe Morgan of the Reds, Jorge Orta of Chicago White Sox, Fred Patek of the Royals and Jose Cruz of Houston Astros.

One of the more interesting free agent declarations came Wednesday when Don Kessinger, former player-manager of the White Sox, who quit last summer in his first year with the dual jobs, filed his notice. Kessinger played in 56 games last season, batting .200 in 110 at bats.

Also declaring for the draft was Jesus Alou, who served as Houston's first-base coach and a part-time player last season. Alou batted .256 batting just 43 times.

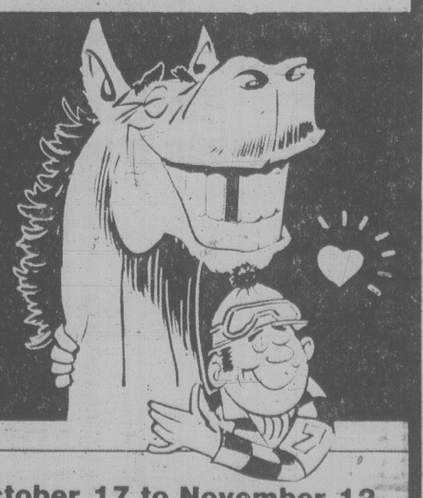

Also on the list are Ed Kranepool of New York Mets, Willie Horton of Seattle Mariners, Milt May of the White Sox, Merv Rettenmund of the Angels, Rowland Office of Atlanta Braves, Jay Johnstone of San Diego Padres, Rennie Stennett of Pittsburgh and Greg Gross of Philadelphia Phillies.

In addition to the 43 players who have already declared their free agency, another dozen players were eligible to enter the draft and have until midnight tonight to announce their participation. Therefore, the number can increase from 43 but will not decrease before the draft is held Friday morning at the Plaza Hotel.

Under the basic agreement between organized baseball and the Major League Players Association, players declaring free agency can still sign with their old clubs up until three days before the draft. That deadline was reached Monday. Shortstop Bucky Dent and first baseman Jim Spencer, who both signed with New York Yankees that day, fell into that category. Players eligible for the draft but still undeclared were able to sign with their old clubs all week, the way pitcher Lynn McGlothen of Chicago Cubs did.

With more than 39 players eligible in the draft, each major league club may sign up to three, unless it loses more than that number. The Yankees, for example, have five players in the re-entry pool — outfielder Roy White, first baseman George Scott, pitchers Don Hood and Jim Kaat and utility man Lenny Randle.

More doors opened to soccer's youth

Exposure is the key to getting a golden tan "all over your body," as comedian Jonathan Winters might say.

And for a young soccer player perhaps with dreams of one day making it big, exposure — the opportunity to be seen as much as possible in game situations — is the key, too.

Providing that exposure is the object of the Lower Island Youth Soccer Association's new under-16 inter-district select team league.

Under the new setup, the Lower Island has been split up into four districts — Gorge-Prospect Lake, Lansdowne-Bays United, Gordon Head-Lakehill-Cordova Bay, and Duncan (including Salt Spring)-Juan de Fuca-Peninsula-Sooke — and two of these four teams meet every Friday night at Royal Athletic Park.

First game in that series was last Friday night when Lansdowne-Bays United edged Gorge-Prospect Lake, 2-1. Tomorrow Gorge-Prospect Lake plays Duncan-to-Sooke.

From these four teams, coach David Keith selects 16 boys to represent the Lower Island in the nine-team B.C. Youth Soccer Association's inter-district select team league.

As Keith, a school teacher at Central Junior High, points out, this rep squad is changing all the time. Out of the 16 who played in the first outing — a 5-3 victory over New Westminster — only 11 were in the side that lost 3-2 to Richmond last Saturday at Topaz Park.

Ultimately, what begins on a district level leads to the selection of the B.C. under-16 team which plays in an inter-provincial competition first in the Western Canadian championships each August and then against the Eastern Canadian champion in a one-game national final usually in September.

B.C. is the defending champion, having beaten Ontario, 3-2, in the final in Vancouver a month ago and two boys from the Lower Island — David's son Adam Keith and Paul Askew — were on the B.C. team.

Doors can open to boys who get to play on this level. From that B.C. under-16 team, Keith says, four players have gone over to England and two have signed apprentice professional contracts with Ipswich. The other two are still being looked at.

And now, because of the new select team setup, more boys will be given a chance to show what they can do and to perhaps take that step nearer to their dream.

"In the past, each district sent its own team over to Empire Stadium to play two games," David Keith explains. "If a boy played well, he was put in the provincial squad. If he played badly at Empire Stadium, that was it. He was finished!

"What this new program will do is allow selectors to see boys in game conditions maybe 14 times. This way, more boys get a chance to be seen more often.

"The other benefits of the new scheme are that boys from some of the outlying areas get an opportunity to play with and against better players and they are also exposed to better coaches," says Keith who is one of only two Level 5 coaches (the other is UVic's Brian Hughes) on the Island, "because, let's face it, it's almost a profession with me!"

The main thing, though, is that the boys — and they are the ones Keith says he's concerned about — will get "a much fairer look" by playing as many games as they are.

"I had one boy say to me after the first game 'Gee, Mr. Keith, thanks a lot. I've already learned more in that game than I've learned in the last four or five years!'

"And, as far as I'm concerned, that's the benefit of the program right there."

Bowie continues investigation

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn continued his investigation Wednesday into Billy Martin's bout with an Illinois marshmallow salesman which resulted in Martin being fired as manager of New York Yankees.

"We expect to wrap up talking to the witnesses in a day or two," Kuhn said. "Then we will talk to Billy. It will certainly go into next week before it is concluded."

Martin had requested a meeting with the commissioner to tell his side of the story.

"I have nothing to hide," Martin said earlier in a statement released through his agent, Doug Newton.

Newton expressed anger that the commissioner suggested in a television interview that Martin had financial problems.

"It is completely untrue and without basis," the agent said.

Joseph Cooper, the marshmallow salesman who suffered a cut lip requiring between 15 and 20 stitches, said he had been victimized by a "sucker punch."

"He abruptly turned and hit me in the mouth," Cooper said.

Tough test for Rutledge

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Jim Rutledge of Victoria is tied for 23rd after carding a four-over-par 75 in the opening round of the 72-hole United States Professional Golfers' Associationnational qualifying school Wednesday at the Waterwood National course.

The 20-year-old Rutledge is tied with Gar Hamilton of Toronto, a veteran who has been competing in the Australian and European tours.

Bruce Douglas and Tom Jones, both of the United States, were the leaders in the 123-player field with one-under-par 70s.

The low 25 and ties from the four rounds will receive their U.S. tour cards.

Rutledge said the course was the toughest he's ever played, with "all kinds of traps, water and trees and the fairways are narrow."

He rated the 6,800-yard layout even more challenging than the famed National course at Woodridge, Ont., where he fired a 20-over-par 304 for 72 holes to finish 18th in the CPGA championship during September.

Trotters' Hallie Bryant does his thing

The Trotters are back with all that great skill

The players change but the show goes on.

Harlem Globetrotters, the household name in basketball through the years, are back in town.

The Trotters, who have been described as the unquestioned attendance leaders in sports history without ever having played a home game or sold a season ticket, will put on their annual exhibition of classic basketball skills and variety show at Memorial Arena Friday night at 8 p.m.

For 52 years the Trotters have been performing their magic before people of many countries and it is estimated that 90 million people have seen them at work, and at play.

Last year the Trotters claimed a record in that they performed before nearly three million patrons.

And the program doesn't change, not really.

Why should it? Why kill a singing bird?

For as former player and now assistant publicity director Hallie Bryant, who came out of Indiana University to play with the club for 13 years, says:

The format this year is basically the same as in the past. The team has its showman, the dribbler, the slam-dunk specialist, the long-shot specialist, you name it. Some are new, some have been here before, but they all must qualify with those individual skills."

The Trotters make basketball seem like fun and they bring another professional team (this time the California Chiefs) with them to provide the straight part of the program.

And for those who want a little more, the variety show that accompanies the club is show-biz too.

All this helps the ordinary fan to identify with the game.

And the Trotters, who started in small gyms in small towns against all comers are back to that type of schedule again.

From here they go to Nanaimo, Kamloops, Vernon and Kelowna. And the only break they get in their regular schedule, which runs from Oct. 10 to April 6, is nine days off at Christmas.

In Februrary they will be off to Hawaii and Australia and Bryant likes to think previous appearances of the Trotters down under have probably had much to do with the success of Australian basketball teams and the furtherance of the sport there and around the world.

"We give clinics in other countries and we think it helps," he said.

So the Trotters are big time now compared to the old days?

True. But this may come as a surprise. They still travel by bus to many of their games and that's how they are travelling in B.C.

"We have 10 players," two referees, a trainer, business manager and concession personnel," said Bryant. "The other part of the show provides its own transportation.

Bryant plays once in a while, if needed.

All seats are reserved with tickets $5.00, $5.50 and $6.00. Children 12 years and under are $1 off the regular price.

Volvo gets involved

NEW YORK (AP) — Volvo, the car manufacturer, will assume sponsorship of the men's Grand Prix tennis tour next year, committing $1 million for 1980.

The company has an option to continue sponsorship for another two years, through 1982.

The Swedish-based auto firm will fill the void left by the Colgate-Palmolive Co., which announced in August it would end its three-year connection with men's tennis after this year.

MENKE JOINS JAYS

TORONTO (CP) — Denis Menke, 39, former major league baseball infielder, has been appointed to a coaching position with Toronto Blue Jays.

U.S. letter may swing IOC vote

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Ballot papers have been sent out this week to the 89 members of the International Olympic Committee who will vote by mail on a plan to bring athletes from both China and Taiwan into the Olympic Games.

A month ago the vote could have gone either way.

But Lord Killanin, president of the IOC, has ordered certain documents to be sent with the ballot forms — including a letter from the U.S. state department — and this may swing the vote.

The letter hints that if the Taiwanese continue to compete as the Republic of China, using the old Kuo Min Tang flag, the nightmare of Montreal 1976 could happen all over again when athletes assemble for the Winter Games at Lake Placid next February.

In 1976 the Canadian government refused to grant entry visas to the Taiwanese.

The IOC's formula, as proposed by the executive board, is for Taiwan to send its athletes to Lake Placid as the Chinese Taipei Olympic Committee, with a special Olympic flag and anthem to be approved by the IOC. Peking would send its team simply as China with the national flag.

The IOC traditionally deals with athletes and tries to keep politics out of its business. But in voting on China, it will have to think of this ominous letter, sent by the U.S. state department to Julian K. Roosevelt, IOC member in United States:

"Regarding China's participation in the Games, this is a decision for the IOC. As for government contacts, the United States as of Jan. 1, 1979, recognizes the government of the Peoples Republic of China as the sole legal government of China.

"At the same time, the U.S. withdrew diplomatic recognition of . . . Taiwan. In consequence of this withdrawal of recognition we do not recognize as symbols of national sovereignty the flag and anthem of the Republic of China. However, we do continue to make visa facilities available to travellers from Taiwan.

Taiwan has refused to drop its claim to be China since the takeover in 1949, and Peking has refused to join in the Olympic Games, or any other international sports activity, while Taiwan takes this attitude.

Killanin and his executive board fear unlimited troubles ahead if they fail to win the support of the IOC.

If the United States refuses admission to the Taiwanese for Lake Placid, the Soviet Union might follow suit when the Summer Games are held in Moscow. And the U.S. could then be expected to hold to its policy in 1984, when the Olympics are held in Los Angeles.

Pie-in-sky up in smoke

By CAROL GOAR

OTTAWA (CP) — Little by little, Finance Minister John Crosbie has been chipping away at his party's election platform ever since he became finance minister.

When he was sworn in June 4, Crosbie made it clear that the $2-billion cut in personal income taxes, promised by Prime Minister Joe Clark to get people spending and to give the economy a lift, did not rank high in his budget plans.

Since that time, the pledged tax cut has been virtually wiped out of this year's economic program both by Crosbie and the prime minister.

Another election theme which has faded is the idea of a "stimulative deficit" first suggested by Clark in a New Year's interview 10 months ago.

As opposition leader, Clark said he was convinced that the government could afford a temporary bulge in its deficit to finance initiatives such as the Progressive Conservative mortgage-interest deductibility plan.

In mid-July, when Crosbie gave his first state-of-the-economy address, he told reporters he did not feel bound by this approach to federal spending.

He did not think it was the right time for the government to pile up more debts and did not think voters would object to his dropping of the so-called stimulative deficit.

This week, the finance minister went one step farther.

"The most stimulative deficit we can have is a smaller one," Crosbie told the Commons finance committee Tuesday.

Minutes later, Crosbie told reporters he is calling on Canadians to lower their expectations — not raise them.

In almost every campaign speech, Clark told voters he found it disturbing and depressing that the Liberal government was calling on them to lower their expectations.

The Conservative Party believes it is a time to raise Canadian expectations, he said.

Crosbie was asked this week by reporters if his repeated public appeals for forbearance in the face of a deteriorating economy meant he is calling on the average Canadian to lower his expectations.

The minister hedged, apparently sensing slippery ground. Then, abandoning caution, he replied: "I would hope individual Canadians are prepared to accept that they'll have to accept less."

No treat for MP's trick

OTTAWA (CP) — MPs were blind or lacked a sense of the appropriate Halloween humor Wednesday.

Jim Fulton (NDP — Skeena) sat through about half of the daily question period wearing a false nose.

No one said anything and eventually the neglected MP took it off.

Recently Liberal Warren Allmand (Notre Dame-de-Grace) ran afoul of the Speaker when he appeared in the Commons without a tie.

NDP's Rae challenges de Cotret to election

OTTAWA (UPC) — New Democratic finance critic Bob Rae has offered to resign his House of Commons seat to allow Senator Robert de Cotret to face him in an election and end the "ludicrous" situation where the government's top economic adviser has not been elected.

"It is high time that the chief economic adviser to the government was a member of this House and the least he can do is make himself available when the committee of the House is meeting," Rae told the Commons Wednesday.

De Cotret, appointed to the Senate and the industry, trade and commerce ministry after his defeat in the last election, has not appeared before the House of Commons finance committee.

"We are moving in ways which is an affront not just to the committee system but to democracy itself," Rae said. No New Democrats can question de Cotret because he is not an MP and the NDP has no members appointed to the Senate.

"It is ludicrous that this gentleman is not a member of this House, that he is not presenting himself for election in the byelections which are being held," Rae said, referring to two November byelections that de Cotret has refused to contest.

Rae challenged de Cotret, former head of the Conference Board in Canada, to come to his Toronto riding of Broadview-Greenwood and "meet the people" in an election. "I will gladly resign and contest it again and take him on."

De Cotret, who was elected in a by-election a year ago but was defeated seven months later, also holds the post of economic development minister and is chairman of the economic committee of the inner cabinet.

Liberal threat pooh-poohed

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark said Wednesday he believes Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau was misquoted in news reports saying the Liberals will try to defeat the minority government as soon as possible.

Therefore, Clark said, he had no comment on Trudeau's statement.

A transcript of Trudeau's remarks Tuesday night to a Liberal gathering reads: "You know, we don't have that much time (in opposition), Liberal friends. Let's throw the government out as soon as we can."

Clark's ministers dismissed Trudeau's remarks.

"It's a decision they (the Liberals) will take and we will take ours," Indian Affairs Minister Jake Epp said.

Public Works Minister Erik Nielsen said Trudeau will have an opportunity soon to try and defeat the government but Nielsen doubted the Liberals would be successful.

NDP Leader Ed Broadbent obviously didn't take Trudeau's remarks seriously.

Broadbent rose in the Commons during the time reserved for consideration of matters of "urgent and pressing necessity" and offered a motion he said was appropriate to Halloween.

Amid laughs from MPs of all parties, he proposed that the House condemn CBC radio "for the frivolous Halloween hoax it indulged in when it reported this morning that the leader of the Opposition actually wants to defeat the government."

Gallup finds less grousing

TORONTO (CP) — Canadians are considerably less pessimistic today than they were a year ago but a majority still are dissatisfied with the direction in which the country is going, a Gallup poll shows.

The question asked was: "In general, would you say that you are satisfied or dissatisfied with the direction in which this country is going ?"

The poll, taken during September in 1,030 personal, in-home interviews, showed 33 per cent said they were satisfied. Fifty-two per cent were dissatisfied and 14 per cent had no opinion. All those interviewed were adults, 18 years of age and over.

In March, 1978, 22 per cent of those interviewed were satisfied, 64 per cent dissatisfied and 14 per cent had no opinion.

Fox 'correct' on RCMP acts

OTTAWA (CP) — Former RCMP commissioner Maurice Nadon said Wednesday that former solicitor-general Francis Fox was correct in telling the Commons in June 1977 that the illegal APLQ break-in was an isolated incident, even though the force was then investigating seven other allegations of police lawbreaking.

Fox assured the Commons on June 17, 1977, that the RCMP's participation in the 1972 break-in and theft of documents from L'Agence de Presse Libre du Quebec in Montreal was an isolated and exceptional incident.

However, Nadon told a royal commission investigating RCMP activities that Fox was present at a meeting 11 days earlier when allegations of irregularities in the force's operations in Montreal were discussed.

Nadon testified that these allegations included burning a barn, theft of dynamite, kidnapping people and harassing officials of a Montreal security company.

Nadon said he was asked on June 14, 1977, to check the statement Fox planned to read in the Commons. He said he saw no reason to change the statement that "the government received repeated and unequivocal assurances from the RCMP that the APLQ incident was exceptional and isolated."

"There was only one allegation that had been proven," Nadon said. Fox knew of the other "irregularities" under investigation, he added.

1980 stamps previewed

OTTAWA (CP) — Stamps commemorating former prime minister John Diefenbaker, Canadian art, culture, wildlife, events and personalities will highlight 1980 postage stamps.

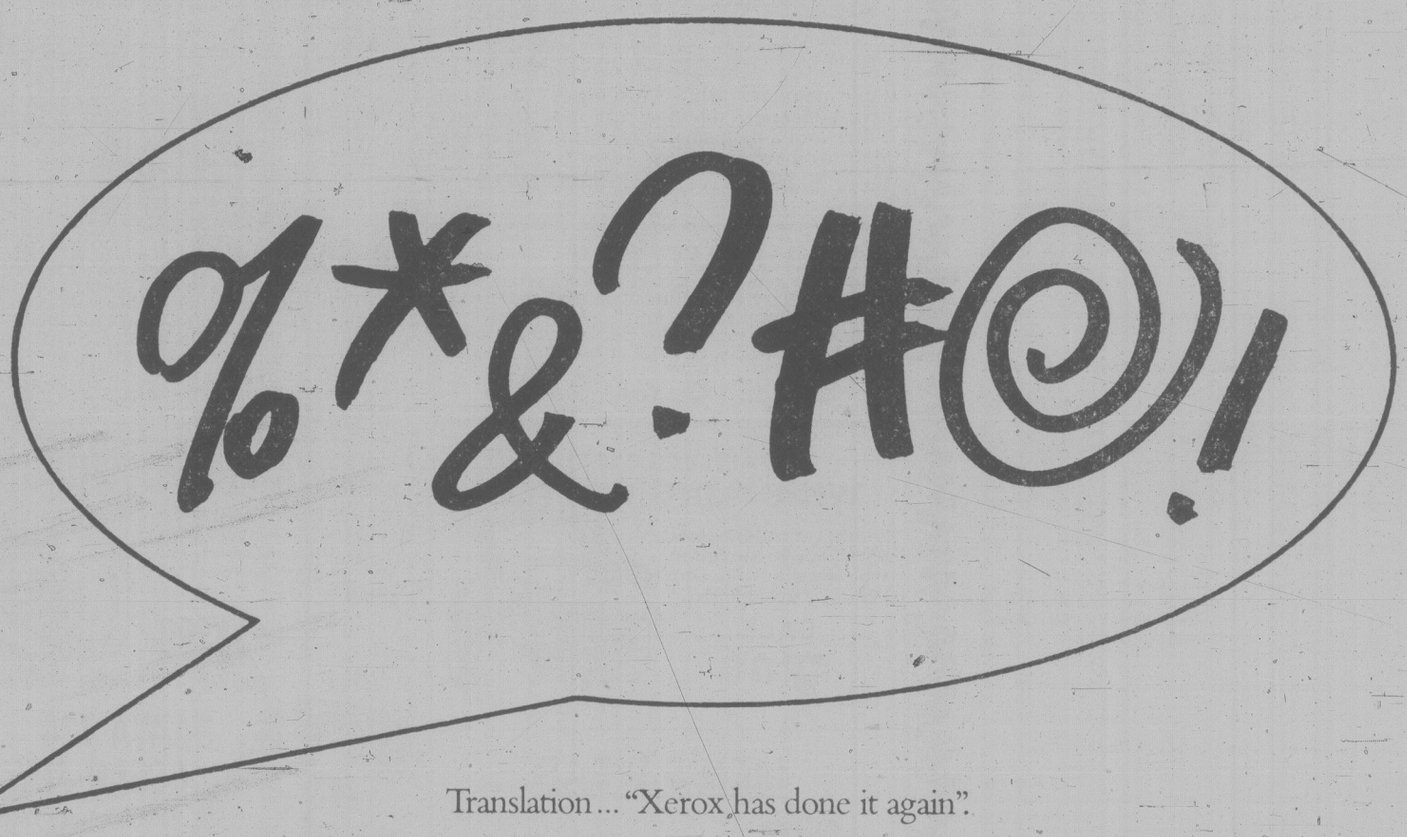

The post office announced Wednesday that the stamps will commemorate the transfer of the Arctic Islands to Canada from Britain in 1880, the 75th anniversary of the creation of Saskatchewan and Alberta and the 50th anniversary of the discovery of pitchblende uranium in the Northwest Territories.

Ned Hanlan, who won the world championship in rowing in 1880, and musicians Healey Willan and Emma Albani will be honored.

Four stamps depicting the spiritual life of the Inuit will conclude the Inuit series begun in 1977. Another four stamps will feature art by members of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts and others will picture the Atlantic whitefish, the greater prairie chicken, Canadian military aircraft and Canada Day.

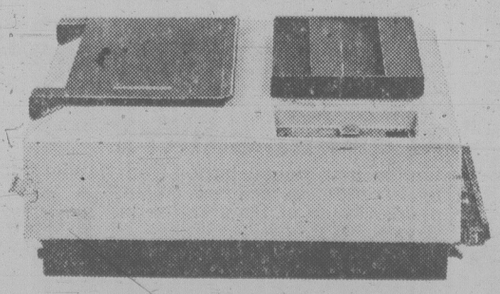

Rehabilitation and gardening will also be featured as will the Olympic Winter Games to be held in Lake Placid, N.Y., and the 1980 Moscow Olympic Games.

Opposition parties blast Clark oil price plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition leaders attacked Prime Minister Clark for the second day in a row in the Commons Wednesday on the federal-provincial dispute over pricing of Alberta oil and Clark accused them of trying to create a national panic.

Under pressure from Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau to use federal powers to ensure Alberta oil will be available to all Canadians, Clark said he stood by his belief that there is little likelihood he will have to use those powers.

"There is no danger of unilateral action by the government of Alberta," he said, casting aside concerns that Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed would follow through with remarks he made Monday.

Lougheed said he would set prices for Alberta oil unilaterally if necessary and if Canadians weren't willing to pay those prices they would have to go elsewhere. He said Alberta was prepared to reduce production and keep the oil in the ground until it could get its price.

"Now look, members opposite can, if they want, try to create national panic and national concern by quoting out of context statements made by the premier of Alberta," Clark told the Commons.

But Clark conceded he had not spoken with Lougheed or seen a text of his speech to an Vancouver audience.

"I can indicate that I have not yet been in touch with the premier of Alberta because I want to see the transcript of what he said," Clark said.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, said Clark had ignored his responsibility by acknowledging he had not spoken to Lougheed to verify the statement.

Trudeau said the current impasse between Ottawa and the producing and consuming provinces is unnecessary.

The government should stick with the existing agreement, he said, referring to a federal-provincial agreement that calls for domestic increases of $1 a barrel Jan. 1 and July 1.

Clark said there is no confrontation between Ottawa and Alberta and he expects a new federal-provincial agreement on oil prices will be worked out shortly.

Broadbent also argued that a new pricing formula is not needed. "Why embark on a program of harm for all?" he asked.

Giguere named as ad 'angel'

OTTAWA (CP) — Senator Louis Giguere was "our angel" with respect to getting federal government contracts for the Canadian Advertising Agency Ltd., a former official of the agency testified Wednesday.

Responding to questions from Crown prosecutor Rod McLeod at the trial of the Liberal senator on charges of influence peddling, Paul Boudreau explained that Canadian Advertising was an "agency of record" with ties to the federal Liberal party.

"Political parties have friendly advertising agencies," Boudreau said.

When a political party takes power, he said, agencies that helped it in its campaign can become "agencies of record."

"This meant that it was to these agencies the government would entrust its advertising campaigns.

"Canadian Advertising was an agency of record for the Liberal Party of Canada," Boudreau told the court.

Giguere, along with Montreal businessmen David Belhumeur and Jean Dionne, is charged with conspiring to accept a benefit of $87,000 in return for the use of his political influence in obtaining federal contracts for Canadian Advertising.

Testimony has established that Giguere, Belhumeur, Dionne and another businessman, Leon Simard, took over Publicor Ltd., a holding company for Canadian Advertising, in 1965.

Two years later, the company agreed to buy out Giguere's interest for $67,000. Giguere, a top Liberal party organizer in Quebec, was not yet a senator.

The company also agreed to pay him $5,000 a year for four or five years while he would continue to work for them, Simard testified, adding that he recalled being told that Giguere's name was to appear in the company records.

Boudreau said Wednesday that when Giguere and the others acquired control of Canadian Advertising in 1965, each agreed to help the agency by bringing it contracts through their various contacts in government and business.

In late 1965 or early 1966, he said, Canadian Advertising received a contract from the Canadian Centennial Commission.

But before official word of the contract came through, Bourdreau said, Giguere told him he thought Canadian Advertising would get the job.

Boudreau's name appears in the company records as a part owner of Publicor, but Boudreau testified Wednesday he had never owned shares in the company.

When shown record books which listed him as a shareholder, Boudreau said that while the signatures appeared to be his, "I can see my name is not typed in the same kind of typing as the others."

He also noted "several erasures" in the company records."

Hotel burglars busted

TORONTO (UPC) — Police took away truckloads of stolen jewels and furs after raids recovered the spoils of a burglary ring whose victims included actor Donald Sutherland and basketball player Wilt Chamerlain.

The jewels and fur coats were recovered during raids on 15 area homes Wednesday by Metro Toronto and York Regional police who estimated the value of the jewelry at $1 million.

"We just divided it up," said Insp. Bill Hay of the York force. "Metro took what they thought had been stolen in Metro and we took the rest."

Seven person from Toronto and the nearby communities of Thornhill and Richmond Hill were charged in connection with the raids. Police said their investigation was continuing.

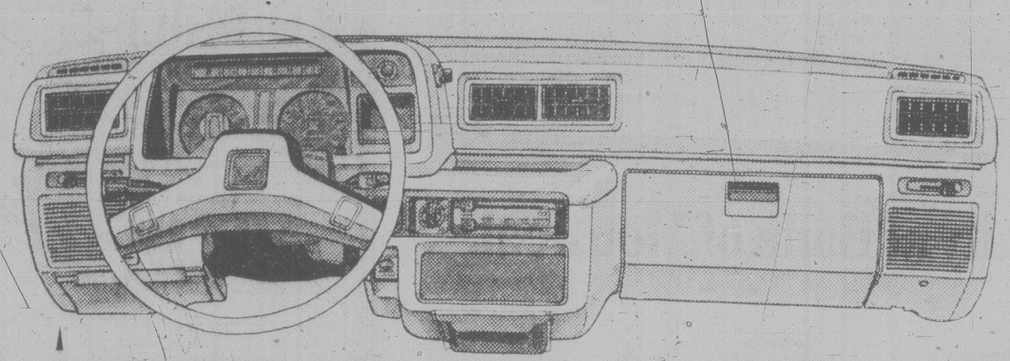

York police said they began investigating a series of break-ins north of Toronto in which hundreds of thousands of dollars in goods was stolen three months ago.

"Our detectives began investigating and following all the suspects in the region who could have been responsible," said Hay. "Finally, we figured we had a lead on the fence they were taking it to and we decided on the raids."

Sutherland's hotel room was burgled in June while he was in Toronto to film a movie. He lost $3,000 in cash, credit cards and his Order of Canada medal which had been presented to him two months before by Governor General Edward Schreyer.

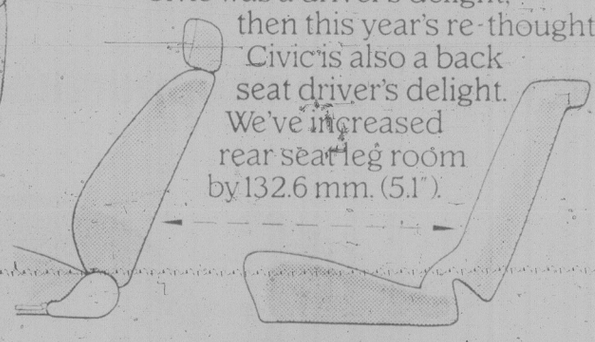

The medal was later recovered by police who refused to describe the circumstances of its recovery. No arrests were made at the time.

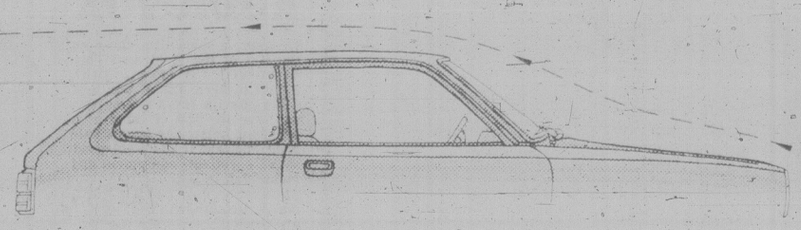

THE NEW HONDA CIVIC.
HOW WE RE-BUILT
THE LEGEND AROUND YOU.

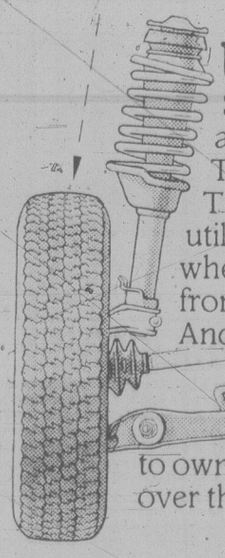

IN FRONT OF YOU. Sit inside the all new Honda Civic and you'll spot something immediately - the important information that lets you know what is happening right in front of you - at an eye's glance, so you don't have to shift your concentration from your driving. And on the right, the dash angles away so there's more knee-room for a passenger.

BEHIND YOU. If the original Civic was a driver's delight, then this year's re-thought Civic is also a back seat driver's delight. We've increased rear seat leg room by 132.6 mm. (5.1").

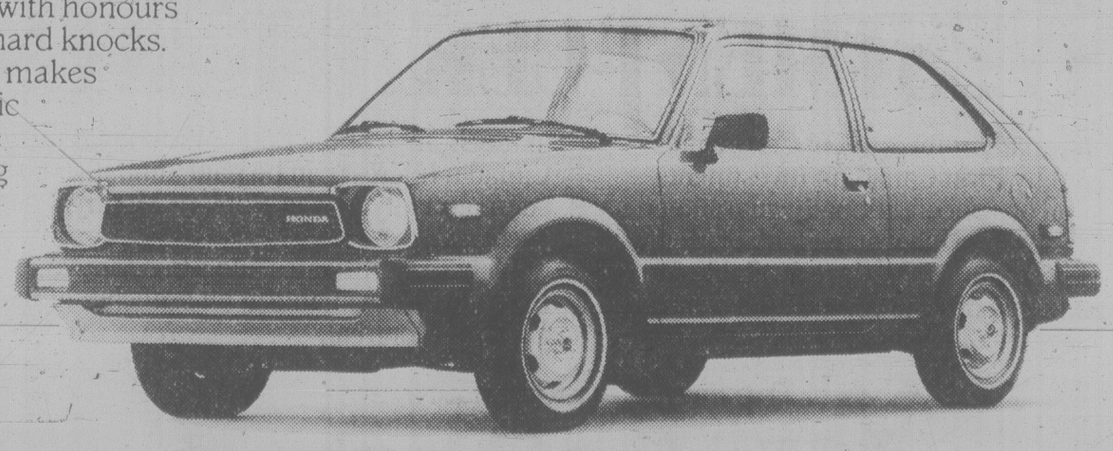

OUTSIDE YOU. The crisp and clean exterior styling of the new Civic has been styled to cut through the air like a hot knife through butter. This makes it dramatically quieter on the inside, and (incredibly) even more fuel efficient than the original legend.

UNDERNEATH YOU. Seven years ago we brought a new story to small car ride. This year we've re-written the book. The fully independent suspension utilizes MacPherson Struts on all four wheels to graduate with honours from the school of hard knocks. And pot-holes. This makes the new Civic even more comforting to own, and to drive, over the long run.

FOR YOU. Last, but not least, is the price. The new standard Honda Civic Hatchback actually sells for less than the Civic Hatchback did a year ago.

THE LEGEND GETS BIGGER.

Model illustrated is the Civic Hatchback Deluxe.

Can't remember — MP

Esquimalt-Saanich Conservative MP Donald Munro said he has no recollection of telling an Israeli politician that Prime Minister Joe Clark stopped the planned move of Canada's embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem because he wanted to punish Jews who didn't vote for him.

"I can't remember saying that. I would never have said anything like that," he said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his Ottawa office.

The Toronto Sun quoted Avraham Sharir, parliamentary whip for Israel's ruling Likud bloc, as saying Munro told him:

"The Jews did not vote Conservative because of Clark's promise and, therefore, we do not feel obliged to honor the commitment."

Sharir told the Sun's correspondent in Jerusalem: "His statement stunned and appalled me. It had an anti-Semitic ring to it.

"It is inappropriate for a state such as Canada to act on such motives."

Munro stopped short of an outright denial of the statement, supposed to have been made on Sept. 25 or 26 at the United Nations in New York, where Munro, a former ambassador, went as a delegate representing the Conservative government.

"I met the man at his request. We had a talk. I can't remember saying that.

"I just find it totally beyond my comprehension that a private conversation would be used in this way," he said.

In Ottawa, Munro told United Press Canada it was unlikely he would have made such a statement, since special envoy Robert Stanfield had not reported back to Clark at the time of his meeting with Sharir and the embassy move was still uncertain.

"We were having a private conversation over a cup of coffee and I do not go around quoting private conversations," Munro said of his talk with Sharir.

"We exchanged views on a vast range of subjects related to Israel and Canada. He spoke very good English but he might have misunderstood me. He may have a better recollection of our conversation than I have."

Western provinces — then the gloom

OTTAWA (CP) — Saskatchewan and Alberta — and to a lesser extent British Columbia — were the bright lights in a gloomy economic forecast issued Wednesday by the Conference Board in Canada.

The board, a private research organization supported primarily by business, predicts the economy will struggle to disappointing 2.6 per cent increase in growth this year.

This is more pessimistic than the three per cent recently predicted by Finance Miniter John Crosbie and falls far short of the four-per-cent growth last year.

British Columbia is expected to show 2.4-per-cent growth this year and 2.6 per cent next year.

The board attributes B.C.'s apparent invulnerability to the downturn elsewhere to a drive among the province's industries to become more competitive and diversify their markets. Previously they sold to the United States almost exclusively.

The economy now is in the early stages of an 18-month slowdown in industrial activity, the board says. By the end of 1980, the rate of economic expansion is expected to fall to what the board calls a feeble 1.6 per cent.

As the manufacturing sector is expected to bear the brunt of the reversal in economic fortunes, Ontario and Quebec will be hardest hit by the economic slowdown.

Although both provinces now are beginning to show trouble signs in their growth rates, the real crunch will come next year. In 1980, the Ontario economy is expected to grow by 0.8 per cent and Quebec's by 0.4 per cent.

The western provinces, by contrast, are experiencing the benefits of a resource boom which is expected to continue well into 1980.

The Alberta economy is expected to expand by 6.2 per cent this year and 5.2 per cent in 1979. Saskatchewan's growth rate is expected to jump from one per cent in 1979 to 4.1 per cent next year.

The economy of Prince Edward Island will be spared to some degree by the federal government's plan to move the department of veteran's affairs to Charlottetown, the board says.

Its expected growth rates for 1979 and 1980 are 1.9 per cent and 3.7 per cent.

All remaining provincial economies are expected to grow by less than two per cent in 1980.

Other forecasts were:

— Manitoba, 0.8 per cent this year, 1.7 per cent in 1980.

— New Brunswick, 2.3 per cent this year, 1.4 per cent in 1980.

— Nova Scotia, 3.1 per cent this year, 1.0 per cent in 1980.

— Newfoundland 7.2 per cent this year, 0.9 per cent in 1980.

Manitoba snow disrupts traffic

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winter hit southern Manitoba with a vengeance Wednesday night, cutting down on Halloween vandalism but causing more than a few problems of its own.

The Red River valley experienced its first significant snowfall of the season which was combined with strong winds. About two centimetres of snow fell between 6 p.m. and midnight.

Police said road conditions were hazardous and 70 cars ended up in ditches after running off the road west of Winnipeg. Parts of Manitoba were also without power for periods as long as half an hour.

Winds gusting to 80 kilometres an hour and icy runways at the Winnipeg International Airport forced the detour of incoming flights.

Several flights were forced to bypass the airport. One cargo plane was diverted to the Brandon Airport where air traffic controllers worked overtime to ensure a safe landing.

The main runway at the Winnipeg airport was still not clear of snow this morning, but flights were landing on the secondary runway.

New land thaw route eyed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Environment Minister Rafe Mair says he will recommend to cabinet that the government find a different method of handling final appeals for removal of land from the Agricultural Land Reserve.

Mair, chairman of the cabinet's environment and land use committee which currently hears appeals, said Wednesday an alternative way has to be found to avoid criticism the government has received, especially for its recent decision to overrule the land commission and free 626 acres of reserve land in Langley.

"I think there is a better way of doing it, so cabinet ministers don't get themselves in the position of making decisions such as this on individual land matters."

Determining over-all land policy is one thing, he said, but the government shouldn't be involved in individual applications.

Mair said the way applications are handled by the Pollution Control Board are much better.

The first application goes to the civil service, but if it is turned down, the appeal goes to an independent group of citizens who sit as the Pollution Control Board.

"A private citizen's board would be infinitely preferable to the system we have now."

Mair said there should be an appeal procedure of some kind, but "I don't think, however, that it (application) going to cabinet has worked out well."

No roadblocks for free stores

VANCOUVER (CP) — Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen says there is nothing standing in the way of the establishment of Canadian duty-free stores at B.C.-U.S. highway border crossings.

Until the federal government last week lifted its prohibition of duty-free shops for road travellers, the stores had only been permitted at airports on the Canadian side of the border.

Nielsen said his ministry, which is responsible for liquor distribution and licensing, has not yet decided when the duty-free stores will open for business or what form they will take.

But he said Tuesday he expects department officials will choose from the numerous applications they expect to receive from private businesses eager to run the stores.

'Babies' a boon

VANCOUVER (CP) — The positive economic effects of the post-Second World War baby boom are just beginning, the national convention of credit unions was told Wednesday.

The "baby boomers," are starting to buy homes and pleasure items and travel widely as they reach maturity, said statistician Heresh Tadman.

They are better educated than their parents, are planning smaller families and will have more leisure time, he said.

Rates pinch credit unions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Credit unions are coping well with high interest rates although there are some problems, says George S. May, chief executive officer of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society.

May, here for the society's annual conference, said Tuesday the rates are affecting credit unions with large amounts of mortgage loans but individual areas of difficulty can be absorbed by the credit union system as a whole.

The dilemma facing many credit unions is that they provide their members with fixed-rate loans while they try to match other institutions in the interest they pay on deposits, May said. As a result, they are being caught in an interest squeeze.

He said chartered banks are in a much better position than credit unions to adjust their lending rates quickly to changes in interest costs.

"Today's money conditions will be reflected in the 1979 net income figures of credit unions — some won't have the funds they did in previous years to add to their reserves," he said. "And they will have to keep a tight rein on things next year as well."

May said membership growth in credit unions is starting to level off but in many areas they are approaching a saturation point in terms of members.

Credit unions have been leaders in promoting short-term mortgages which have to be refinanced every year. Some people who took out one-year-term mortgages in 1978 now find themselves hard-pressed to handle the monthly payments at today's much higher interest rates, May said.

"Credit union managers tell me they have to deal with many more situations of this type than they did previously," he said. "One thing they can do is to extend the amortization period — say from 25 to 30 years — so as to reduce the monthly payment.

"But we are still advising people to stay with short-term mortgages because we expect interest rates to drop next year."

Driving law changes await committee report

Attorney-General Garde Gardom says driving laws will not be changed until he receives the final report from a group looking into all aspects of motor vehicles.

Gardom was commenting on criticism from a provincial court judge of how inexpensive and easy it is for motorists to get their licences back after losing their driving privileges for amassing too many penalty points.

Gardom said the eight-member study team, headed by Neil McDiarmid, associate deputy attorney-general, criminal justice branch, is expected to make its recommendations within the next few weeks.

On Monday, Victoria Judge Blake Allan criticized the motor vehicle branch system of charging $25 to drivers wishing to get their licences back after they have been suspended, saying it was a tax-collecting scheme.

"This is the very reason that we established the motor vehicle task force," Gardom said, "to conduct a fundamental review of all laws governing the use of motor vehicles."

Provincial paroles Jan. 1

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia will have a provincial parole board Jan. 1, Henry Bjarnason, director of the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre (Oakalla) said Wednesday.

This means that prisoners eligible for parole in provincial jails could be released earlier than when they were subject to decisions made in Ottawa, he said.

The new B.C. parole board will be responsible for all prisoners in provincial institutions. Ottawa will retain control of the parole system covering prisoners in federal institutions.

Treatment for arsonist

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A 24-year-old Prince George arsonist was sentenced Wednesday to three years in jail so he could be sent to a facility where psychiatric treatment is available.

Dave Rombough was sentenced for setting two fires at a rod and gun club earlier this year that caused a total of $15,000 damage.

A pre-sentence report recommended a sentence of at least two years, the minimum needed for incarceration in a federal jail.

Rush tests for PCB mink feed

ABBOTSFORD (CP) — Federal and provincial veterinarians promised Fraser Valley mink producers Wednesday they will do a crash testing program to determine levels of the toxic chemical PCB in mink feeds.

The commitment came at a special meeting between government officials and the executive of the B.C. Mink Producers Association, which fears the $20-million industry could be wiped out because of PCB (polychlorinated biphenyls) in the feed.

The PCB accidentally found its way into tallow imported from the U.S. by three Abbotsford feed firms, Buckerfields, Surrey Co-operative and Ritchie Smith Ltd.

The government officials said the contaminated tallow was used for about a month before detected.

From the feed companies, the chemical ended up in chicken feeds and when eaten by the birds was stored in their body fats. Waste chicken parts were then sold to companies supplying mink feed.

Sect has neighbors worried

100 MILE HOUSE (CP) — A 70-year-old English lord who heads a religious sect is causing a stir in British newspapers because he is rightful heir to a stately English home.

Lord Martin Cecil has lived on a cattle ranch in B.C.'s Interior for 50 years, but it's his future inheritance that has London gossip columnists in a flap.

Lord Martin is the younger brother of the Marquis of Exeter, Sir David George Brownlow Cecil, 74, whose country seat is Burghley House, a 300-room Elizabethan mansion near Stamford, Lincolnshire.

"People are afraid that a religious sect will move into historic Burghley," said Lady Olga Maitland, a columnist for the London Sunday Express.

"It's a magnificent pile — a first class country home with a huge park all around it. The Queen stays at Burghley when the horse trials are held every summer."

Lord Exeter's only son, John, died in 1934. So when the current earl dies, the title will pass to Lord Martin and his descendants.

Lord Martin is head of the Emissaries of Divine Light, a group with an estimated 2,000 members in Canada, the U.S., Europe, Africa and Asia. When he dies, the family title will pass to his son Michael, also active in the sect.

Lord Exeter said his brother's religious beliefs do not concern him.

"He runs his religious group — he's a grown man, entitled to do as he likes."

Lord Martin says it isn't a religious group and members don't join, they just live a certain lifestyle.

"While it has what would be thought of as religious overtones, there are no particular questions of faith," he said. "We are concerned with practical living, including some aspects of spirituality."

Lord Martin says his family and a holding company operate a 12,000-acre cattle ranch at 100 Mile House, 450 kilometres northeast of Vancouver.

"This whole thing is a lot of ridiculous nonsense," he said. "Gossip, gossip, gossip. I have been here about 50 years, and that speaks for itself. I might not even outlive my brother."

Trustees okay $225,242

Additional spending of $225,242 was approved Wednesday by trustees considering the provisional budget for Greater Victoria School District.

The addition of two more speech therapists than the administration called for added the largest figure to proposals — $95,940 instead of the requested $47,970 — and $27,500 was trimmed from the list of other proposed additions.

Trustees allowed $2,000 of a proposed $14,500 to allow accreditation and evaluation assessments in elementary and secondary schools, which would have permitted the administration to determine the cause of weaknesses in the learning programs.

Internal assessments have already identified by subject the areas in which improvement appears needed, but specialists were to be engaged to pinpoint the trouble in the method of instruction. One such review likely will proceed next month, but not those scheduled for the new year.

Special education and pupil services will get $122,000; the district superintendent's budget of $237,003 and the instruction administration budget of $173,026 were approved; a native Indian home-school co-ordinator for $15,582 got through; $12,940 was approved for mathematics assessment; $33,400 for a fine arts consultant; $17,000 for native Indian programs; $17,600 for clerical and assessment purposes; $15,500 for learning improvement programs.

Most of the evening concentrated on curriculum spending. The next meeting to discuss budget matters will be Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

Eastern oil subsidy soars

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government will pay out $1.6 billion in fiscal 1979-80 to subsidize the cost of oil imported into eastern Canada, more than double the original forecast.

The Commons energy committee approved the expenditure Wednesday as Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn blamed the increase mainly on soaring world oil prices.

The government established the oil import compensation program in 1974 to cushion the difference between domestic prices and the cost of imported oil, now about 40 per cent of the country's requirements.

Western Canadian oil is piped as far east as Montreal while parts of Quebec and the Maritime provinces depend on imports, mainly from Venezuela and the Middle East.

The original forecast expenditure in the former Liberal government's 1979-80 main estimates was $740 million, based on world prices in December, 1978. Since then, world prices have increased by about 60 per cent, Hnatyshyn said in a statement.

The actual July, 1979, average import cost at Montreal was $25 a barrel compared with a forecast of $18.75 a barrel. Current domestic oil prices at the wellhead are $13.75 a barrel.

The Progressive Conservative government sought approval in the annual supplementary estimates for an additional $885 million for the program. A reduction in forecast imports, due to stepped up western Canadian production, brought the final supplementary estimates to $835 million.

Hnatyshyn used the figures to plead the government's case on the need to speed the rate of domestic increases to bring them toward world levels.

Oregon Gov. Vic Atiyeh munched on a turkey sandwich to show the public it had nothing to fear from reports of birds contaminated by PCB. Atiyeh ate the first of the 500 turkey sandwiches offered free to the public in a program designed to counteract recent adverse publicity suffered by turkey growers. Federal officials impounded 27,000 turkeys from a flock near McMinnville after tests showed some of the birds had high concentrations of PCB which has been linked to cancer. In addition to the turkeys, 70,000 chickens have been destroyed at a farm near Puyallup, Wash., and 800 frozen turkeys are being held in Seattle because they also are suspected of being contaminated. "I hope that the people of this state will understand they have nothing to worry about — this is great turkey and I love turkey," Atiyeh said.

Lardner

Pope John Paul II will address the 20th Conference on World Hunger in Rome next month. He will be speaking Nov. 12 to 1,500 delegates from 146 countries on the problem of providing food to the hungry in the world's overpopulated areas. Providing food to the underpriviliged of the world has been a constant theme of John Paul's recent speeches.

Four well-known writers who are reformed alcoholics say the belief that heavy drinking leads to literary greatness is more fantasy than truth. "My father said to me once that no one ever wrote something under the influence of alcohol that wouldn't have been better sober," Ring Lardner Jr. told a National Council on Alcoholism Inc. talk session on. His father was also an alcoholic. "I have considered myself a writer for 20 years but I didn't make any money until I was sober for three years," said Jill Robinson, author of Bed Time Story and Perdido. Ian Hunter, a television and film writer and former journalist, and sports writer and best-selling author Roger Kahn also spoke at the session held to discuss the problems of writers and alcoholism.

A death threat described by Madalyn Murray O'Hair as the most disturbing she has ever received resulted in the atheist leader cancelling a speaking engagement at the University of Denver. A letter said there would be ". . . two or so snipers at various positions around the building in which she will enter to speak . . ." Police said they did not have enough time to guarantee her safety.

Dear Abby:

I have been seeing my lady for three years and want to marry her. 'M' is 55 and I am 62. I have a nice home, no financial worries and live alone. My problem is getting 'M' away from her family. She works eight hours a day as an accountant while caring fully for her 94-year-old mother who is blind and incontinent. 'M' also has a 65-year-old brother, recently retired. He's a loner, smokes incessantly, is 100 pounds overweight and has an unexplainable control over 'M.' I can see her only a few hours on Saturdays. Brother is so possessive that I am not even permitted the pleasure of washing and waxing 'M's' car. I want a wife, not a part-time lover.

'M' says she loves me but can't marry me until her mother dies. I question whether 'M' can ever break away from her brother. Please answer me.

Mr. X

Dear Mr. X:

The longest wait in the world can be waiting for someone to die. Your lady is not a prisoner of her family — she has chosen to take a beating, work herself to a frazzle and let her brother control her. She isn't the victim — You are for meekly accepting her terms.

Dear Abby:

When I was 20 and my husband was 23 we were sure we never wanted any children, so he got a vasectomy.

Now, five years later, I find that I have changed my mind, and I desperately want at least one child. My husband still wants no children, and that is my problem.

He refuses to even discuss it. He doesn't even want to associate with couples who have children. (They are a 'bad influence' on me.) He will not consider adoption, artificial insemination or vasectomy reversal surgery.

How can I get him to change his mind, Abby? I am determined not to go through life without at least one child.

Childless

Dear Childless:

Quit begging him to change his mind. If, in a weak moment, he were to give in just to please you, from what you tell me he would make a poor father. If you are determined not to go through life without a child, you may have to find another husband.

Dear Abby:

I am looking for an insurance company that recognizes the fact that 40 per cent of all home fires are started by cigarettes, and therefore will allow a substantial discount to those who ban cigarettes from their homes.

Do you have any leads?

N.A.

Dear N.A.:

No. But after this hits print, if there is such an insurance company, I may.

Sipper slips into town

By PAT DUFOUR

Rich Robenseifner of San Francisco is not the kind of guy you casually offer a cup of coffee.

When he visited The Times newsroom, as an example, he opted for a glass of water instead of coffee out of the office cafeteria.

On the B.C. ferry on the way over from Vancouver he settled for a glass of orange juice instead of the customary java.

It's not that Robenseifner is out of step with most North Americans who have to have their cuppa before their system gets into full gear. Indeed, he has had a steady love affair with coffee for the past 15 years.

Robenseifner is one of a rare breed; a coffee-buyer and taster for Hills Bros. and, therefore, one of the experts who decide what we coffee freaks will down each time we take a break or sit back after a satisfying dinner.

Married with a small daughter, Robenseifner is so protective of his sensitive palate he makes all the brews when he's at home. His personal preference is for strong, black coffee but, outside the home, he'll doctor up a less-than-perfect brew with sugar — just to be sociable.

Normally, he drinks eight to 12 cups a day for pleasure and samples between 100 to 150 cups in addition while he's on the job.

A sensitive palate, he says, is no magical gift from the gods. It's cultivated through "time, patience and a lot of hard work."

His love affair with coffee began 15 years ago, while he was still at school, when he got a part-time job with Hills Bros., working in the back shop, learning how to hand-roast and prepare coffee.

Now he spends three months of the year on the road, visiting about 45 countries in Central and South America, as one of the three buyers in the San Francisco plant. Another three buyers from the company's Edgewater, N.J. office carry out similar sorties. Of the countries visited, coffee beans are selected from between 37 and 38 of them.

When in San Francisco, Robenseifner and his fellow buyers are on the job at 6:30 a.m. to check on going prices when the New York Stock Exhange opens.

As coffee-taster, Robenseifner explains the motions are much like those of European wine-tasters except that the brew from each blend is drawn into the mouth by a spoon and rolled around the mouth and tongue before being spit out.

"At this point we're checking for acidity content, full rich flavors and aromas, and consistency of the brew," he says. As many as eight to nine different kinds of beans are often used in a single brew.

Robenseifner says he prefers the drip-method of making coffee. "I believe the drip-coffee method is better with the water passing over the grounds one time; there is very little error in the making of coffee."

In contrast, he says the percolater method can lead to an over-extraction of coffee with a resulting bitterness. When dining out he insists on "a fresh and reasonable cup of coffee, not one that's spent 45 minutes or an hour on the burner."

Robenseifner says housewives would be wise not to buy in bulk. " Don't buy more coffee for a week or a week and a half to store at home. Even if kept in a refrigerator there's a tendency to go stale," he says.

If economy and the threat of rising prices outway that consideration, Robenseifner says the coffee should be put in good freezer bags and taken out of the freezer in quantities that can be used in one or 1½ weeks. He says freezing slows down the oxidization process that deteriorates coffee quality.

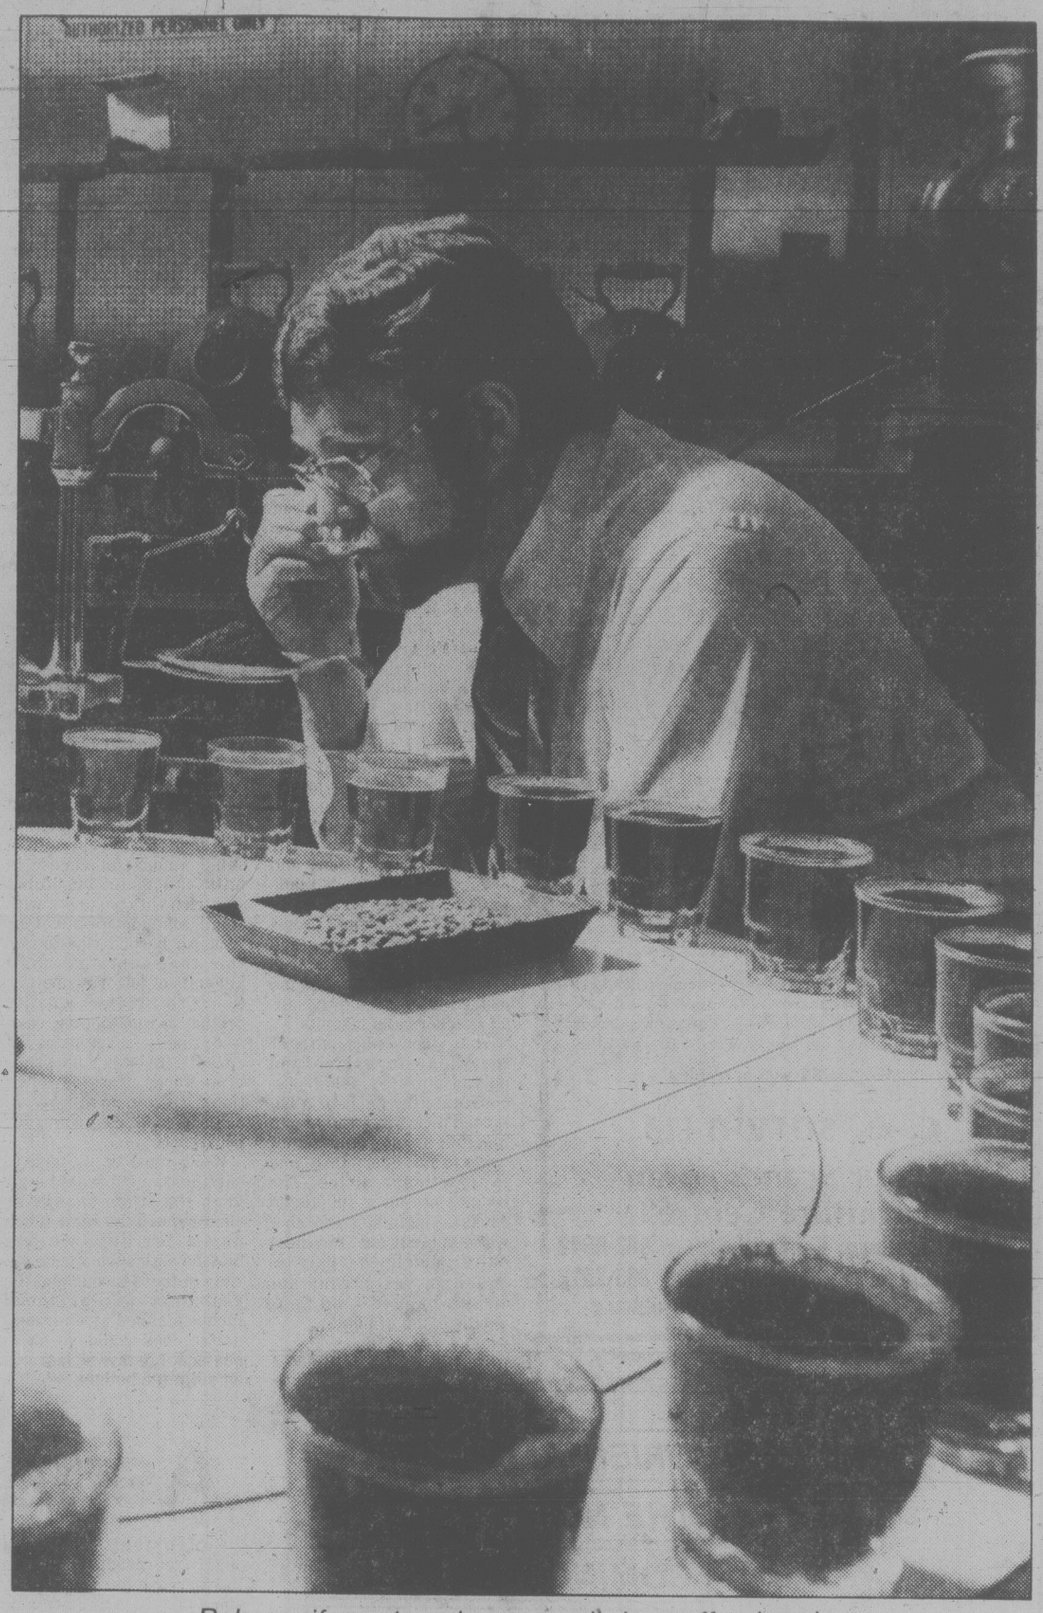

While Robenseifner relishes coffee in its pristine form, he also enjoys it when gussied up for party fare. One of his favorite recipes is Coffee Rio that's made with a brandied spice comparable to the qwell-known Tom and Gerry mix.

You spoon one tablespoon of batter into each cup, fill three-quarters full with piping hot coffee and stir. Top with whipped cream and you have a dessert that is different or an after-dinner coffee that rates a gourmet's smile.

To make Coffee Rio batter you combine 1½ cups of packed brown sugar with ¼ cup of soft butter, a ¼ cup of whipping cream, 2 tablespoons of brandy or 2 teaspoons of brandy extract, 1 teaspoon of ground cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon of ground nutmeg, ⅛ teaspoon of allspice and ½ teaspoon of finely grated lemon peel.

Beat until the ingredients are well blended. This makes 1½ cups of batter, enough for 24 cups. The batter can be stored, covered, in the refrigerator and beaten again before being used.

And, come next morning, Robenseifner says, that first cuppa will probably taste even better than it ever did before.

Victorian roasts own

Victoria has something unique for coffee-drinkers — the only firm on Vancouver Island that imports and roasts its own coffee.

The firm is owned and operated by Bill and Judy Waslenchuk and is the Cairo Coffee Merchants Ltd. on Douglas Street.

Waslenchuck also has advice for coffee-drinkers.

He says it's best to start off with the house blend on which most coffee retailers rely on for their reputation. In the case of Cairo, the Rosita is a house blend which has been drawing customers in increasing numbers for 40 years.

Waslenchuk will not say what beans are used, only that there are five different varieties in the blend.

He goes one step further than profesional coffee taster Rich Robenseifner, who advocates the drip-method as the best. Waslenchuk advocates an espresso machine. "It's steam forced hot water through a fine, fine grind, taking more of the coffee taste," he says.

Waslenchuk imports his coffee beans from 10 countries through his broker in San Francisco, buying nothing but the No. 1 beans from countries with the best reputations. In addition, this week he will be receiving beans from Indonesia. He says this will be the first time in 100 years that Indonesian coffee beans have been imported.

He says beans from one country can be roasted to make as many as four different brews, depending on the degree of roasting.

Waslenchuk says The Book of Coffee and Tea, written by the Shapira brothers of New York is a "99½ per-cent Bible" for those interested in learning more about coffee.

It also helps to have someone like Waslenchuk around.

Pinpointing allergies takes sleuthing

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

My doctors agree that I have a severe allergy. I've had all kinds of tests. They come up with positive things that I'm allergic to. After a few months I start all over with new tests, only to find that I'm allergic to totally different things. I'm at my wits' end. I don't know where to go from here.

Mr. N.W.

Dear Mr. W.:

I understand how exasperating and frustrating this can be. Many patients like yourself go on indefinitely trying to find the particular substances that they are allergic to. It takes a great deal of energy, patience and detective work to find the culprits.

I recall a 29-year-old patient who complained that she had not had the free flow of air through her nose for many years. She was studied by allergists who came up with the idea that she might be sensitive to molds, dust, air pollution and pollens. She was desensitized, all without any significant result. One day, she came to my office in a state of elation. She had suddenly started to breathe again through the nose, and could not believe the miracle that had happened to her. She casually mentioned that this joy was interrupted only by the fact that her husband had been taken to the hospital for emergency removal of his appendix.

I attributed no special significance to this until it developed that all of her symptoms returned when he came home from the hospital. My speculation about this coincidence was confirmed. I suspected that there might be some relationship between the woman's allergic symptoms and her husband's presence.

It was later found that she was, indeed, allergic to the glue that he used as a cabinet maker. When he showered and left his clothes in his factory, her symptoms entirely disappeared.

I tell this story only to illustrate how difficult it can be to pinpoint allergic responses in some people. Yet, all is not lost for you. For there are now many new, highly sensitive tests which seem to be more effective in finding the exact offender.

One test (RAST) is a radio-immune study which can detect offending substances in a patient's blood serum. Another one, the PRIST, is also very effecive. These tests are used in conjunction with the routine skin tests and scratch tests. There are also special tests of the eyes, nose, and lungs which add valuable information for uncovering the causes of allergic reaction.

I hope that some of these can be helpful to you in finding the cause of your distressing allergic symptoms. It certainly can be frustrating to suffer allergies and not feel everything possible is being done to curb them.

"Is there a reverse switch on the drill?"

The balancing act

food for thought

By JEAN MAYER

'Is it possible to feed my family a balanced diet without unbalancing our anemic food budget?' The answer to this frequently asked question is a decided 'yes.'

There are any number of ways to achieve a balanced diet as well as a balanced food budget. First, planning a balanced diet means the need to serve enough of all the foods on the menu so that everyone in the family gets enough calories. In North America that's rarely a problem, but you must make sure that the foods are low in the high calories of fat and the empty ones of sugar. It also means planning menus around some rules of thumb. The day's meals should include:

Two or more servings of fruits and vegetables. The size of servings depends on the size and physical activity of each family member. Make one serving a dark green leafy vegetable like broccoli or peas, or a deep yellow vegetable such as carrots or winter squash.

In addition to these two, offer at least one serving of fruit or a vegetable that's rich in vitamin C. Citrus fruits and juices are traditional, but raw green peppers, cabbage, salad greens, broccoli and white potatoes are alternatives.

Two or more servings of milk and milk products for adults, three or four for children. Weight-watchers or cholesterol-counters should make these low-fat.

One or more servings of the traditional "protein foods,' animal or vegetable, which can include meats, fish, poultry, eggs, dried beans or peas and nuts. And don't forget that milk and cheese, cereal grains, even some vegetables, provide excellent-to-good protein.

At least two daily servings -- preferably more, for they're both nutritious and low-calorie -- of foods made from whole-grain or enriched flours and cereals containing wheat, rice and barley. Most available foods are breads, pastas, dry and cooked cereals, lightly-salted crackers and biscuits.

These foods, plus butter or fortified margarine and polyunsaturated salad oils, constitute the basis of a balanced diet. They can be put together in any number of ways to suit every taste and every ethnic cuisine. The recipes are up to individual cooks -- including the chef when you eat out, for these daily guidelines apply as much to restaurant and brown-bagged food as to meals eaten at home.

As to menu planning, however, we suggest that it be done around three meals a day, each one roughly equivalent to one-third of each family member's daily food needs.

A typical day's menu might be:

BREAKFAST: fruit or fruit juice; cereal with milk or, for those not watching dietary cholesterol, an egg; toast or muffin; milk, tea or coffee if desired.

LUNCH (at home or away): main dish, such as soup, salad, a sandwich or pizza; bread, enriched or whole grain; vegetable, cooked or raw; fruit; milk, coffee or tea.

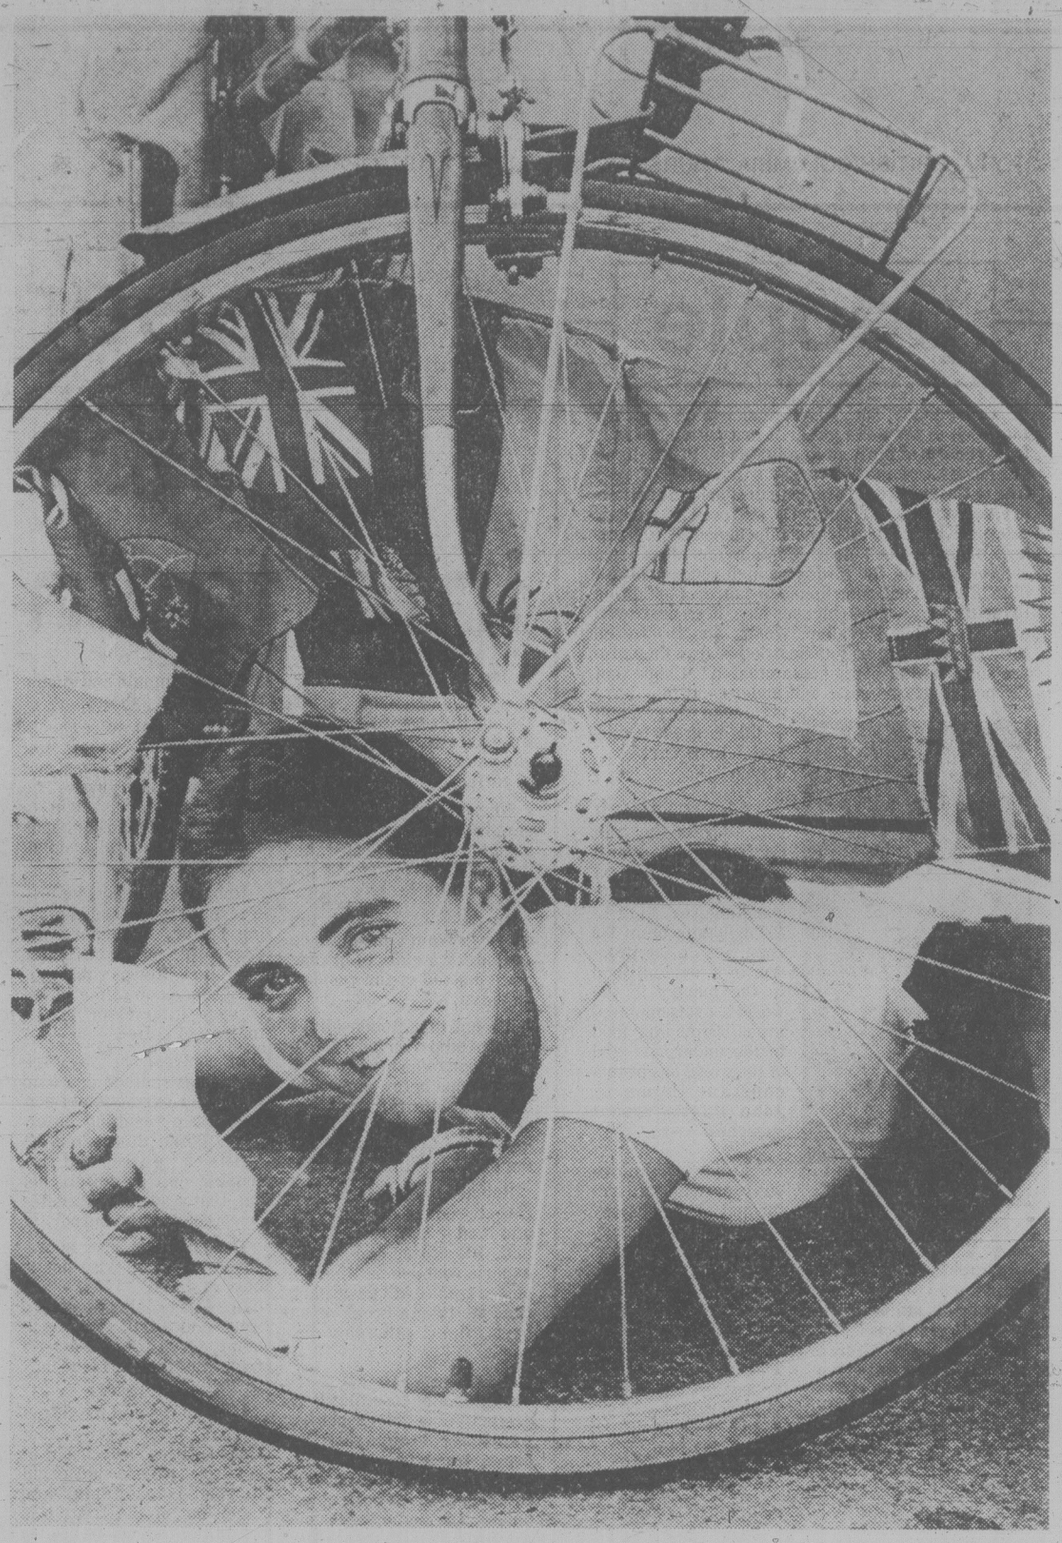

DINNER: main dish of meat, fish or poultry, baked beans, casserole or stew; vegetable, cooked or raw; salad; fruit or simple dessert; milk, coffee or tea.

SNACKS: raw vegetables and fruit, crackers, cheese, yogurt, nuts in moderation, etc.

In matching nutrition to your purse, remember that the best buys in fruits and vegetables vary with seasons. Also, canned, frozen or truly fresh local products should be included according to their price. Milk is your best source of calcium and vitamin D, and fortified, powdered low-fat milk that you mix yourself is not only as good for you as liquid but cheaper.

To stretch your protein dollar, serve a casserole of enriched macaroni and a small amount of cheese in milk sauce, or vegetable soup rich with pasta but with small amounts of meat or fish. An herbed rice casserole that contains small amounts of leftover meat or fish also provides quality protein at rock-bottom cost. And, finally, serve plenty of cereals, breads and other grain foods. They're nutritious, filling, moderate in calories and easy on your pocketbook.

While most of us tend to eat the same breakfast or grab the same snacks or choose much the same lunch day after day, we are blessed with such a wide variety of foods throughout the year that well-balanced menus planned by an imaginative cook could go unrepeated for many weeks, even on a limited budget.

CROSS-COUNTRY CYCLIST Nicolem Belanger has cycled 5,000 kilometres from her home province of Quebec to Vancouver. The 24-year-old McGill University graduate said she pedalled about 24 kilometres a day and collected the flags of the six provinces she covered since she started out in June.

Aspartame for sweet future

nutrition matters

dr. elizabeth bright-see and jane hope

Consumers who like sugar-free products are on the increase but Canadians, since 1977, haven't been able to purchase them.

Nearly six million North Americans in 1978 began using specific low-calorie products made without sugar. When a group was asked what they'd eaten the previous day, it was discovered that 46 per cent had drank a sugar-free soft drink, 16.8 per cent had chewed at least one stick of sugar-free gum, 7.5 per cent had enjoyed sugar-free dressings on salads and 2.4 per cent had consumed a sugar-free yogurt. Other products used were table-top sweeteners, artificially sweetened canned fruit and dessert mixes. Canadians, because of the saccharin and cyclamate ban here, have not had access to many of these products recently. The ban on low-calorie sweeteners affected some 600,000 diabetics plus a sizable population of those on weight control programs or with disorders such as hypoglycemia, high triglyceride levels, hypertension and dental carries or tooth decay.

Hopefully, help is on the way! Two months ago, our Health Protection Branch completed an evaluation of data submitted by industry in support of the low-calorie sweetener, Aspartame. In conducting the review, the Branch took into consideration the expressed desire of numerous Canadians, including diabetics, to have a safe and acceptable sweetener for use in place of sugar. The Canadian Diabetic Association, which had been pushing for approval, welcomed the news that Aspartame is being considered for use. It views this as a progressive step which should be of benefit to diabetics.

There is a 90-day period, ending this month, during which time, interested parties may submit briefs to the government. If, after that time, there are no persuasive contrary arguments to the use of Aspartame, it will be approved for use in a limited number of foods and beverages. In effect, this will bring back the sugar-freet soft drinks, powdered beverages and table top sweeteners!

However, we are going to pay a higher price to satisfy our "sweet tooth" or to control weight. It's estimated that because of the anticipated high demand for aspartame and the current fairly low supply (there's some in storage in Japan now as a result of the anticipated approval which was then stayed by FDA in the U.S. in 1977) — about 10 cents will be added to the cost of a large bottle of soft drink.

Aspartame is the generic name for a non-sugar sweetener composed of two amino acids. The amino acids used in Aspartame are the same as the amino acids in foods such as meat, dairy products, vegetables, fruits and cereals. A distinction should be made between Aspartame and other low-calorie sweeteners such as cyclamates.

Rebel medic tags mates 'dangerous'

TORONTO (CP) — While most people stand in awe of medical expertise and surrender meekly to advice about their health, at least one doctor says he no longer believes in modern medicine.

Dr. Robert S. Mendelsohn, a Chicago pediatrician, says doctors are dangerous, hospitals can kill and baby formula is the grandfather of junk food. And he says modern medicine is based on faith, not scientific fact.

In his book, Confessions of a Medical Heretic, Mendelsohn likens modern medicine to a church, complete with its priests and acolytes, rituals, liturgies and sacrifices; a church whose god is death and whose religion, like all religions, is based on faith.

He says that if a patient asks "why?" often enough — why this operation? why this drug? — he will ultimately reach the "chasm of faith," and the doctor's final response wll be "trust me."

Mendelsohn, 53, is associate professor of preventive medicine and community health at Univerity of Illinois and has been chairman of the Illinois medical licensing committee.

He urges patients to stop trusting and start asking questions, to become heretics and radicals. He tells citizens to be uncooperative when they go to the hospital.

Mendelsohn says modern medicine's cures have become more dangerous than the ailments they treat.

For example, he says, penicillin was miraculous when first used for critical illnesses. But the drug has been grossly over-prescribed, often in situations where it is useless anyway, so that now people can die from reaction to the drug.

He says thyroid cancers are turning up in people exposed to radiation on the head and neck 20 to 30 years ago when it was prescribed as treatment for acne or to reduce the thymus gland.

Mendelsohn fears enthusiastic use of new methods, such as ultra-sound during pregnancy, may one day prove to have been an error.

Ultra-sound waves bounced off a fetus produce outlines on a screen which can tell an obstetrician as much as an x-ray without the danger of radiation.

He cites the imprecision of all kinds of tests including electro-cardiograms, which he says can show disease in the healthy and miss disease in the sick.

He wants to see uncomplicated births at home. He says only 20 per cent of births have to take place in hospitals.

He wants to build what he calls the new medicine, to be concerned with proper nutrition, clean air and water, good communication between doctors and patients and the individual's acceptance of responsibility for his own health.

The new medicine will strengthen the family, which modern medicine does all it can to disrupt.

Above all, the medical heretic says, the new medicine will rest upon "faith in life," rather than medical care, and its motto will be: "Do no harm."

However, he adds: "People are plenty smart, they shouldn't trust any doctors, including me."

Break for non-smoker

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. insurance company that pioneered discounts to non-smokers said its experience shows cigarette smokers have markedly higher death rates and should be charged higher premiums.

The differences in life expectancy "are too large to be ignored . . . in individual life insurance underwriting and pricing," State Mutual Life Assurance Co. said in a study.

The study suggested that because two-thirds of U.S. adults do not smoke, the standard life insurance tables should be revised to make non-smoking the norm and cigarette smokers should be placed in a "substandard" risk category.

That may not be practical yet because of sales considerations, said the study by actuaries Michael Cowell and Brian Hirst. But it predicted: "The insurance industry may eventually decide to adopt a substandard classification for smokers."

William Kloepfer, vice-president of the Tobacco Institute, an industry group, said that while he has not yet examined the study, State Mutual's measurement "is based on a single factor and doesn't take into account other possible factors."

Kleopfer said a number of things "may contribute to mortality rates in terms of lifestyles, personal customs, environmental exposures, occupational hazards, smoking, gender, drinking, diet — we could go on and on."

State Mutual found a 7.3-year difference in average life expectancy for men age 32 depending upon whether they smoke cigarettes. Smokers' life expectancy is under 72 while non-smokers can expect to live until nearly 79, it said.

That compares with the average five-year gap between the sexes in the life tables, which figure that 32-year-old women will live to 79 and men to 74.

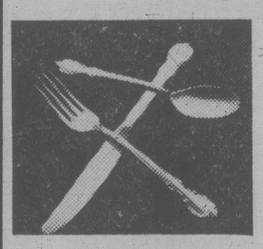

Because the U.S. insurance industry takes into account women's longer lifespan when it sets premiums, "it becomes difficult to justify not making an underwriting distinction by smoking," the study said.

State Mutual became the first insurance company to offer discounts to non-smokers in 1964 after the first U.S. surgeon-general's report.

Some 50 firms now offer discounts ranging from four per cent to 20 per cent, with the biggest cuts usually for short-term policies. Home Life, Phoenix Mutual and Allstate are among those giving discounts.

None of the giant insurers, such as Prudential, Metropolitan Life, John Hancock and New York Life, offers discounts. But all are reconsidering.

Librarian's goal: Help you save food dollars

For $8 plus tax, you can buy one man's system to curb costs at the local grocery store.

The system is called Market Master and was developed by Bill Oldfield, a University of Waterloo librarian.

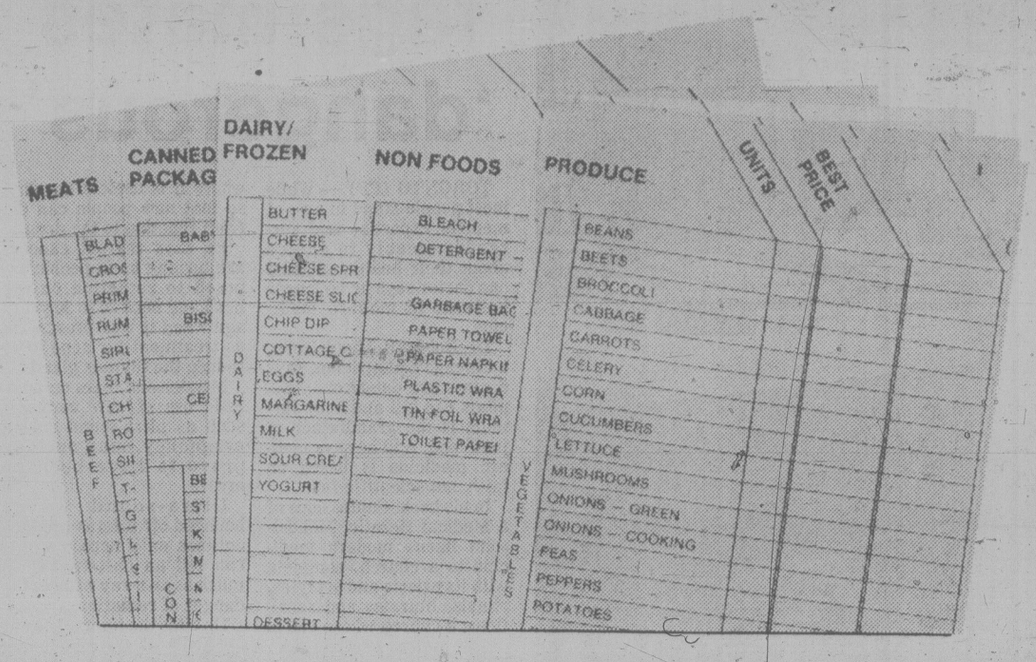

Market Master is no miracle way to save money, but it is a shopping list with space for price information on all the products a family regularly buys.

The system, advertised and distributed recently throughout Victoria, is in a color-coded binder small enough to tote along when you do the weekly shopping.

You can check prices on the shelf against the regular ones you've written in the booklet to help you decide whether to pick up an item now or wait a few weeks for a special.

Oldfield's system grew out of his study on how supermarkets sell food and his conclusion that there are price specials on almost all products every three or four weeks.

They are offered to lure shoppers into the store to buy not just the specials, but all their other weekly needs, offered at higher prices.

Oldfield said that not all advertised specials are a bargain; his Market Master, by providing a guide to normal prices, helps you avoid getting stung on them.

More than half the items most shoppers pick up are on impulse "and supermarkets spare no effort or expense to exploit this fact."

The store is laid out to entice you to pick up more of these items. Staple items, the ones that form the backbone of grocery shopping and are bought almost every week, are scattered throughout the store.

Products that yield the highest profit are put at eye level.

Consistently strong sellers such as a popular brand of tomato soup are never put at eye level but in a spot where you have to hunt for them and will spot lots of other enticing goodies in the process.

Market studies show that the longer you can be kept in the store, the more you will buy, Oldfield said. Every minute beyond 30 that you can be kept there will add another $1 in sales.

There is no great over-all price competition among chains, Oldfield said. One survey of more than 200 items came up with a net difference of only 96 cents among four chains.

But there is competition on things such as parking, variety of goods, friendliness of staff and cheque-cashing privileges.

He said his Market Master has turned up savings of 15 to 30 per cent a week.

Clipping costs

CHICAGO (AP) — Jan Leasure figures she has 3,000 money-saving coupons around her house, more than she can ever use.

So the 30-year-old English teacher, who estimates she has saved $1,400 in the last year by battling inflation with coupons and refunds, attaches some to each copy of her monthly newsletter, Refunders Against Inflation — a publication with its own refund offer.

"I have 500 coupon-clipping subscribers in 28 states and the circulation is growing," the Waukegan junior high school teacher said Wednesday. "A year's subscription is $10. A person can save that much by just going to her medicine cabinet and reading some of the refunds available on certain items."

Mrs. Leasure said she became coupon-conscious two years ago.

"My husband also is a teacher and we just couldn't seem to keep up a lifestyle we wanted on our two salaries," she said. "Then, too, we had a daughter 17 months ago.

"I started looking for coupons and refunds during my regular shopping. Now I spend about four hours a week making the rounds of hardware stores, drug stores and supermarkets in Lake County."

There's a big difference between coupons and refund forms, said Mrs. Leasure. Coupons are cash-off deals on many items, while refund forms can be sent in for cash returns. Most forms are on the packaged product or displayed nearby.

"I make the rounds of stores, take notes on refund offers I find and list them in my newsletter," said Mrs. Leasure. "Usually about 200 offers are listed every month — most of them are new, but some are holdovers with a 60- to 90-day expiration date.

"I buy only the regular items my family uses and get my refund forms that way — dog food, baby food, pop and so forth," she said. "You certainly wouldn't buy something you didn't need just to get a form. In the first 18 days this month, I've gotten $29.50 in refunds. In the last year it amounted to $360 in cash. Savings by using coupons for the same time were $1,040."

She started her newsletter in September after a brief advertising campaign. Readers get $1 for every new subscriber they recruit.

Most of the honey marketed in Canada comes in liquid or creamed form. The color, flavor, and aroma of honey is determined by the kind of flowers from which the bees gathered the nectar.

There are four different color classes: white, golden, amber, and dark. You'll always find the color stated on the label of each honey container.

To maintain the flavor of honey, it is advisable to store it at room temperature in a dry place. However, if you want to store it for a lengthy period of time, keep it in the freezer, its flavor and texture will not be affected.

Honey is a free folder that provides basic information on this food. The folder also contains about 20 recipes for main courses, sauces, and desserts which make use of honey.

To obtain your copy of Honey, write to the Information Services, Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0C7.

Any group of three or more people who have farming as their principal occupation can qualify as a farm syndicate. Once recognized as a syndicate, these people will be eligible to receive loans from the Farm Credit Corporation.

A farm syndicate can borrow up to $15,000 per member for the purchase of farm machinery, buildings, and installed equipment. Cooperative associations such as these have enabled many farmers to overcome the high cost of individual ownership.

If you'd like more information on farm syndicates, write to the Public Relations Dept., Farm Credit Corporation, Box 6309, Station "J" Ottawa, Ontario, K2A 3W9. Ask for their free booklet Farm Syndicate Loans.

A forgotten affliction makes a lousy comeback

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times

Robert Burns was aghast at seeing a louse "on a Lady's Bonnet at Church":

Ye ugly, creepan, blastet wonner,
Detested, shunn'd, by saunt an' sinner,
How daur ye set your fit upon her,
Sae fine a Lady!
Gae somewhere else and seek your dinner,
On some poor body.

NEW YORK — A mother was no less horrified to find that lice had infested the hair of her two school-age daughters. She reported it to the small parochial school they attended and the school nurse then examined the heads of all the other students. Three other cases were found. Then the mother checked with neighbors whose children play with hers, and she uncovered several more cases of head lice. Further inquiry revealed that two of the local public schools were "crawling with lice." Some children had been infested several times.

For reasons that mystify the experts, lice — especially head lice — have made a surging comeback in recent years, afflicting children and sometimes adults from all rungs of the socioeconomic ladder. Head lice are different from body lice, which are mainly a problem of vagrants, and crab lice, which are spread primarily — but not exclusively — by sexual contact.

Many parents react to the discovery of head lice on their well-cared-for offspring with disgust and shame, keeping the matter to themselves and thereby encouraging the spread of this annoying scourge.

You may clear up the case or cases at home and fanatically clean everything in the house that might be contaminated, only to have your child become reinfested through contact with another louse-ridden child. Since an infestation can go undetected for weeks or longer, it's easy for the tiny insects to spread from head to head before anyone knows they are about.

Once they're detected, however, it's important to uncover all active cases among school acquaintances and friends and get them treated at the same time.

Preventive measures, such as not sharing combs, brushes, hats, ribbons or headbands with anyone, are also crucial to controlling the spread of a lice infestation. Frequent shampooing with hot water may also help, because the louse is particular about the temperature of its environment and doesn't like to be much hotter than 87 degrees Fahrenheit. But these preventive measures are admittedly no guarantee. The most fastidious individuals can become infested.

Lice are very tiny and prolific insects. Adult head lice are only one to two millimeters long and tend to assume the color of the hair they're on, so you may not see them even during a careful check under a bright light with a magnifying lens.

What you can see, however, even with the naked eye, are the tiny eggs, or nits — pearly white and oval — cemented to the hair near the scalp. Their favored habitat is the back of the head and behind the ears. They may also be found on the eyelashes and eyebrows. The nits can be distinguished from dandruff, which has no particular shape and easily flakes off the head. The firmly attached nits have to be pulled off with tweezers or fingernails.

A single pregnant adult louse is all that's needed to start an infestation. In her month-long lifetime, she can lay 140 eggs. In eight to nine days, these eggs hatch (if conditions for hatching are unfavorable, the eggs can remain viable for a month) and in 10 days the nymphs reach reproductive maturity, mate and start the cycle again.

Once hatched, the nymphs must feed on human blood within 24 hours; they repeat their feedings about five times a day. This produces the persistent itching that is the hallmark of a lice infestation. Inflammation and infection can result from scratching, but otherwise lice infestations are not dangerous. Head lice do not carry diseases.

Although lice neither jump nor fly, they can crawl very quickly and pass easily from one child to another with a single scratch of the head, a friendly tussle, or a shared hat or comb. They can be picked up from a contaminated article of clothing, a piece of furniture, a car seat or bed linens. But you don't get them from pets (who have their own insect problems) since head lice are parasites restricted to human hosts.

As a general precaution, it's wise to check your child's head carefully for nits, perhaps once every week or two. Other telltale signs are itchy scalp and red rash-like marks on the scalp. If lice are discovered, inform the school and the parents of your child's friends. Also check others in the household, including adults and baby sitters.

If lice are found, it's not necessary to shave the head or soak it in kerosene. Home remedies don't work. The only way to kill lice and their nits is with an insecticide. Some are sold in pharmacies over the counter, such as A-200 Pyrinate; others require a prescription. The most effective — but also probably the most toxic — is a prescription cream, lotion or shampoo called Kwell, also known as gamma benzene hexachloride, or lindane. It can be absorbed through the skin and can produce convulsions if too much is left on for too long. According to The Medical Letter, a drug advisory for doctors, Kwell is "reasonably safe" if used once or twice. Follow the directions on the label carefully. One application should be all that's needed, but some experts recommend a repeat shampoo 24 hours or about a week later.

It's crucial to disinfest all contaminated articles at the same time as the infested head. Combs and brushes can be washed with the shampoo. Bedding and clothing should be washed in hot water, dried in a hot dryer and ironed.

Nonwashable items should be dry-cleaned.

Clothing that should be cleaned includes sweaters and jackets that might come into contact with the head or nape of the neck. Furniture and car seats should be washed or vacuumed.

To control school epidemics, objects like wrestling mats and floor pads used by young children, as well as head rests in school buses, should be disinfested.

An over-the-counter insecticide spray is available for furnishings; however, The Medical Letter says the spray is "unnecessary and potentially dangerous" and warns against its use.

Phobia foils forum on irrational fears

TORONTO (CP) — Catch-22, the concept of contradiction invented by Joseph Heller, clearly was a problem at the forum for phobics held by the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

Phobics, those suffering from irrational fears, were encouraged to attend the forum. But unfortunately, said psychologist Ivan Silver, agoraphobia — the fear of public places — is the most common phobia.

Silver told the audience of about 100 on Wednesday that 75 per cent of agoraphobics are women.

After agoraphobia, come social phobias — the fear of eating, drinking, blushing, or performing other normal activities in front of others.

Fear of animals, heights, darkness and thunderstorms are also common, he said.

Dr. John Jameson, a Toronto psychiatrist, said a fear becomes a phobia when it interferes with normal functioning.

For people suffering from agoraphobia, walking downtown can be "like walking into the jaws of a lion."

He said partners of phobic patients often unconsciously encourage the phobic condition. The husband of an agoraphobic becomes so used to the dependent, neurotic relationship in which the wife is unable to function outside the home, that any improvement to her condition may be a threat to him.

"Most people who have phobias never come to doctor," Silver said.

Psychologists, counsellors and others familiar with sexual images in the media say the photograph of a child's bare hand grabbing the forefinger of a man's large outspread hand, is unnatural, grotesque, suggestive and sinister.

The child's hand belongs to McCarthy's grandson, who modelled free for the picture.

The child's index finger penetrates the adult hand forming an image of sexual intercourse, said the worried critics. Some said the adult's forefinger is pointing into the youngster's palm, a sign of masturbation, while others saw images of ejaculation and orgasm.

The picture and several others submitted by Vancouver photographer Mona Helcermanas-Benge made Fran Grunberg, director of the Vancouver child abuse team, "physically sick."

"The picture is obscene," said Dr. Bob Harper, a Simon Fraser University psychologist.

Brent Parfitt, a member of the inter-ministerial committee which published the book, rejected the suggestion of sexual images, but said, "I have to agree that it's not a pleasant picture. Not everybody likes it."

McCarthy's only comment when approached at a Socred caucus meeting in Delta was: "These are asinine charges."

The sexual implications of the picture were exposed when freelance film producer Linda Stunell refused to mention the booklet in a film commissioned by McCarthy to go along with the book.

Stunell said she was shocked and horrified at the picture's offensive and bizarre connotations. She said she could see the word sex and another explicit four-letter word spelled on the man's hand.

Stunell has received $8,000 from McCarthy, $2,500 from the B.C. Police Commission and $2,500 from the United Way for the film, but McCarthy is threatening to demand her money back if Stunell refuses to include some mention of the book.

Mary-Louise McCausland, B.C. director of film classifications, saw the photos and referred the matter to the deputy attorney-general. She never heard back.

Gardom weighing Chilliwack probe

Attorney General Garde Gardom is considering an inquiry into allegations of land-dealing by members of Chilliwack municipal council.

A call for an investigation was made Wednesday by Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber.

A ministry spokesman said the request would be given full consideration and a decision would be made by the attorney-general when he has studied the situation.

Barber said he had received a copy of a confidential letter sent to Gardom last week which contained "specific complaints against three senior officials and details of five additional allegations of serious impropriety."

It also provided information on the installation of sewer services by the local authority for the benefit of a private interest and apparently provided documentation to substantiate the allegations, he said.

"Internal investigations by the municipality itself would be worthless," Barber said. "The charges must be examined by an outside body."

Stump pins skidder driver

A 23-year-old skidder operator escaped with minor injuries Wednesday afternoon when his machine overturned on a logging road off the Malahat near the base of Tunnel Hill.

Gary Higgins of Orono Road in Langford was trapped inside the cab, his leg pinned against a stump, for nearly an hour before he was freed by the Langford fire department.

Higgins told Colwood RCMP he was driving along the logging road when the vehicle went over an embankment at a switchback and dropped about 70 feet to the road below.

OAK BAY
ACCESSIBILITY TO THE PUBLIC

During my eight years as Alderman in Oak Bay I was strongly impressed by the ability of the citizens to communicate with their Council, which at its meetings takes the time to hear a citizen's observation or complaint even when the subject is not on the agenda.

Committees dealing with problems make it a practice to view the problem at its site. This helps preserve a feeling of solidarity and stimulates continued interest in what is going on in the municipality.

If elected as your Mayor I will work to see that this communication and accessibility continue.

Symphony gets subscription boost

The number of Victoria Symphony subscribers for the 1979-80 season has more than doubled over last season, going from 1,900 to the current figure of more than 4,000.

The accumulated operating deficit for the fiscal period ending May 31, 1979 and the three-month period ending Aug.31, 1979, has climbed to a total of $239,497.

A report tabled at the Victoria Symphony Society's annual meeting by honorary treasurer Alan J. Hoey points out that the deficiency of revenue over expenditure is mainly due to a change in accounting policy which saw the society's fiscal year-end changed at the 1978 annual meeting, from May 31 to Aug. 31.

A recommendation by Dr. Hoey that the former fiscal year-end be re-instated, was later adopted by the meeting.

"The stabilization of current operations to prevent the accumulation of additional deficits in the short term should be the immediate priority of the society" the report states.

It goes on to say that the first step of the stabilization process is now in place. This season's subscription campaign has produced in excess of $170,000 in revenues, compared to the $98,710 reported for the previous season.

Grant levels from the municipal and provincial authorities are termed "generally satisfactory".

Support from the Canada Council to the society is about two to three percent below the national average, the report states.

As to private sector support, this is currently still approximately $79,000 below budgeted expectations.

Nevertheless, the report points out that the revenue generated in this area has been almost doubled by comparison to the preceding year.

In her report, president Dorothy Frost said that for her "it had been an exhilerating and most satisfying year. In one short year, we have gone from the brink of bankruptcy to sold-out houses. The future is bright and exciting."

Sixteen directors were elected. They are:

Oboists, students needed in concert

O boy! It's oboe time at University of Victoria.

All oboists or former oboe students and players are asked to come forward to perform in this historical and musical 'first' for Victoria.

The Royal Fireworks suite consists of six concerti grosso written for flutes, oboes, bassoons, strings and continuo.

Oboists should contact Jesse Read at the UVic School of Music.

Trio Victoria concert will be wide-ranging

From contemporary back to the romantic period of the 19th century, is the compass of Trio Victoria's second concert of the season, Friday at the Conservatory of Music, 1050 Joan Crescent.

Winifred Scott is guest pianist on the program, joining cellist James Hunter in the Brahms Sonata for violoncello in E minor.

Sydney Humphreys, violin, Hunter, and pianist Robin Wood will perform English composer Malcolm Arnold's Piano Trio. The concluding number will be the magnificent "Archduke" Piano Trio in B flat Major, Op.97 by Beethoven.

The CF-16 means business in British Columbia.

There are many reasons why General Dynamics' CF-16 is the right choice as Canada's new fighter aircraft.

Performance, cost and maturity are three good ones.

But there are also some good reasons – business reasons – why the CF-16 is right for British Columbia.

Our industrial benefits programme means we'll be sharing manufacturing technologies with Canadian industry from sister companies like Otis Elevator, Carrier Corporation, Essex and Sikorsky Aircraft, all units of Pratt & Whitney Aircraft's highly diversified parent, United Technologies Corporation. These technologies can be applied to new products and new markets, not just new aircraft. And the real value of the technologies is that they're labor intensive. Which translates directly into jobs. And helps a lot of Canadian companies compete more effectively in a worldwide marketplace.

Best of all, we know how to make an industrial benefits programme work. We've proven it in Europe with an extensive coproduction programme in four partner countries, including both assembly and testing of our F100 engine.

Behind us are a track record and an attitude that show we mean business in Canada:

- Pratt & Whitney Aircraft of Canada is the country's leading aerospace manufacturer.
- Otis is Canada's largest manufacturer of elevators and escalators.
- Essex is Canada's leading supplier of automotive wiring harnesses.
- Carrier is one of Canada's major suppliers of air conditioning and heating equipment.

Since the beginning of the new fighter programme, United Technologies has placed over $120 million worth of business with Canadian companies. Some of it right here in British Columbia. Which means we already have a stake in British Columbia's vitality – and we're growing.

The CF-16 is a mature, proven weapon system already selected by Belgium, Denmark, The Netherlands and Norway as their new fighter for the 1980's. A fighter that's setting impressive operational sortie records, as well as new standards for industrial cooperation.

If the CF-16 comes to Canada, there's a lot that comes with it.

Alert Bay tempest flares as another girl dies

Troubled St. George's Hospital in Alert Bay and the community's only permanent physician, Dr. Jack Pickup, are on the hot seat again after the death of another Indian girl.

Regional coroner Douglas Jack overruled Alert Bay coroner William Deadman and Wednesday ordered an inquest into the death last Friday of Elizabeth Robertson, 16.

The girl, a patient of Pickup's, died 30 hours after being admitted to the hospital Oct. 26 after an apparent drug overdose. She lapsed into a coma the next morning and died that evening.

Jack said the inquest will be held within two or three weeks, but will be conducted by someone other than Deadman.

"It wouldn't be right for Deadman to conduct the inquest because he's chairman of the hospital board of governors," Jack said in an interview from Vancouver.

Deadman had said Tuesday that he would decide whether to call an inquest after receiving autopsy reports in two or three weeks.

The autopsy was performed Tuesday at Campbell River, but police said results were sent to Vancouver for analysis and they could not give a cause of death until a report was received.

The girl had been living with an aunt since her mother died 18 months ago, but was placed in a provincial government receiving home about a week before her death.

The decision to hold an inquest came one day after the band said it had been told by an aide to federal Health Minister David Crombie that he would recommend a public inquiry be called into the delivery of health services to Indians living on northern Vancouver Island and the nearby mainland.

The Canadian Press distributed an erroneous report Tuesday that federal Health Minister David Crombie had already ordered the inquiry.

Nimpkish Indian band members had been calling for an inquiry since the death Jan. 22 in St. George's of Renee Smith, an 11-year-old Indian girl who died of a ruptured appendix and gangrenous appendix.

In June, a coroner's jury ruled that Pickup, the doctor who attended to the girl, was negligent.

Band spokesman William Cranmer said Wednesday he is pleased an inquest has been ordered into Robertson's death "because there are many questions about the girl's death we want answered."

He said the band wants to know why Deadman didn't immediately call an inquest; where the girl obtained the drugs; qualifications of staff in charge of the receiving home; the number of experienced staff on duty at the hospital while the girl was a patient and why Pickup didn't seek a second medical opinion.

Silence greets anti-pot speech

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Health Minister Bob McClelland opened his anti-marijuana road show Wednesday to less than rave reviews.

His tough line on the drug's use was received in virtual silence by members of the chamber of commerce here, who applauded politely at the end of his speech but turned down his invitation to question him further on the subject.

However, after he finished speaking, the minister was besieged by reporters who tried to ask him about his claim that the mafia was taking over the marijuana trade and adding dangerous impurities to the drug.

Asked whether legalizing marijuana would not force the criminal element out of the business, McClelland said: "If you legalize bank robbery, you get rid of the criminals too."

The minister than got into an argument with a reporter over whether health research studies tend to support or oppose marijuana use.

In his speech, McClelland had said that scientific research was leaning toward the anti-marijuana line. Asked to name his sources he told the reporter to drop him a line and he would give him details.

McClelland's speech was part of his campaign to force reversal of the federal government's plan to decriminalize marijuana. Federal officials have said they want to remove the criminal penalties for personal marijuana use.

McClelland said he intends to bring his message to communities around the province to alert them to the potential hazards of legalizing the drug.

He said decriminalization could "create an impression among our young people that marijuana is either safe or harmless."

"At a time when the world is wondering about how to come to grips with the effects on our social and health structure because of another soft drug — alcohol — our No. 1 public health and social problem, surely it would be a fool's errand to develop legislation that, even by implication, we condone the use of a drug whose dangers only now are beginning to be understood."

Marijuana is a major business, involving huge, illicit profits and large-scale crime, he said.

"The hippie grass salesmen of the '60s have been moved aside by the largest international drug syndicates in the world today. Today's smugglers are smooth multinational dealers, as adept as arranging for the laundering of huge amounts of drug money into straight businesses as they are at marketing and smuggling across national boundaries, almost at will."

McClelland said a lot more study must be done before determining for sure whether marijuana is harmful, but in the meantime Canadians should follow the principle that a drug must be presumed harmful until proven otherwise.

The minister's remarks were immediately criticized as "1930's myth and superstition" by the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

DATSUN 1980.
THIS IS OUR YEAR.

This is our year to show you a car that knows how to live. The way gas is going and the way Datsuns go on so little of it means a lot. The new 210 conserves gas better than 98% of all the cars sold in Canada.*

The new 200SX heads the 2 litre engine class.* Datsuns lead in fewest repairs and lowest maintenance costs. Our cars win rallies year after year. Our six year anti-rust plan is the first anywhere. The confidence we feel is not manufactured.

OUR NEW 200 SX. STREET SMART. FINE ART.

On a wet street, on a sharp corner, the new 200SX will make its name. Agile, quick, precise, street smart. The engine is a fresh step in design. Electronically fuel-injected. A computer replaces the carburetor. Power efficiency is the best in its class. Gas efficiency, ditto. All four wheels exhibit power-assisted disc brakes.

Technical superiority, detailed craftsmanship, unabashed beauty. Bad news for Scirocco, Celica, Mustang, Capri, Camaro and Firebird.

*Source: According to Transport Canada, 1979 Fuel Consumption Guide. Edition II, for the Datsun 210 and 1980 200 SX, both with 5 speed manual transmission.

Source: Autoweek Magazine April 16th, 1979, according to a recent survey done by the North American Dealer Group utilizing information gathered by the warranty company in the form of claims in 191,212 expired service contracts on all makes and models sold in the U.S. over the past five year period.

OUR NEW PICKUP. IT'S NO FUN BEING #1.

If you don't improve and beat yourself every year, somebody else will. For 12 straight years, nobody who sells imports has sold more half-tons than Datsun.

Never has something so beautiful been built to absorb so much punishment for so little money. For 1980 the lines are sportier. The engine has guts. The King Cab has jump seats to seat two extra adults. The rear windows flip out. Smart thinking shows everywhere. In the Sportruck, Stretch and King Cab models.

Pick whichever #1 you like.

OUR NEW 510. THE FAMILY CAR WITH A RACY REPUTATION.

A car that can take the East African Safari Rally can take anything your family can dish out. The engine won't sag under a full load. But a family of five laden with luggage needs even more than a rally driver. More room. The new 510 4-door hatchback has it, and inside it, luxuries predominate.

Take your family out for a spin, then go out alone. Accelerate, corner, brake. Recall the East African Safari.

OUR CARS LAST AND LAST AND LAST.

The last three cars we'll mention are the new 210 economy classic, the 310 with front-wheel drive and the famous 280ZX. See them all at your Datsun dealer.

SIX YEAR ANTI-RUST PLAN

Opening lead — queen of clubs.

The principle of covering an honor with an honor is cited with reverence from Walla Walla to Dneprope-trovsk, but the fact is that this rule is not quite as simple as it sounds.

Thus, it is surely correct to cover with the king if declarer leads the jack from the J-3-2 facing the A-Q-4. Covering with the king holds declarer to two tricks instead of the three he would make if the jack were ducked.

But it would be wrong to cover if you had the K-x-x and declarer led the jack from dummy's J-10-4 toward his A-6-5. He would make two tricks if you covered, but only one if you ducked. As a matter of fact, the best rule to follow is to cover an honor if it can gain a trick, and not cover if it can cost a trick.

This advice may not be particularly helpful — for it tells you to use your head instead of a rigid formula — but that is the kind of game bridge is, and if you find the rule too difficult you can always switch to canasta.

Today's hand is an extension of the principle and demonstrates the underlying theory. South is in three spades and West leads the queen of clubs, which wins. When West shifts to a diamond, declarer goes up with the queen and returns the nine of trumps. If East ducks, so does South and, as a result, makes three spades.

But if East covers the nine with the jack — as he should to cater to the possibility of West's having four spades that include the eight and a high honor — South goes down one. The nine in this case is treated as an honor, and East covers because the play cannot cost him a trick but may gain him one.

Trailers finally hit the road

By PAUL MINVIELLE

As dawn broke over Centennial Trailer Park this morning, a few mobile homes were still in place awaiting the tow trucks that will move them to places as remote as Zeballos on northern Vancouver Island.

Gaping bare spaces surrounded by abandoned flower beds mark where the other 50 and 60-foot mobile homes once stood.

There is one holdout, but it's a temporary victory at best, and the resident isn't even around to take advantage of it.

The landlord, Litwin Construction Ltd., had given residents occupying the 22 pads in the trailer and mobile home park at 1455 Craigflower Road until Oct. 31 to move out.

The company, which has leased 1455 Craigflower and four other parcels of land from members of the Songhees Indian band, has already started building the first of many townhouses nearby.

Residents first fought the move, then tried to form a cooperative to start a new mobile home park elsewhere, then finally gave up.

Several sold out at a loss, some managed to find space in mobile parks in the Western Community, and several were forced to move five miles the other side of Sooke.

There is one trailer, however, that will be staying in place.

The resident is Brad Dinney, 20, who is an apprentice in industrial insulation and who works around the province.

Dinney was in Chetwynd when official notices were given to tenants of the park to move.

The Rentalsman insists that residents must be handed their termination notices personally, with a witness, or the notices must be sent by registered mail.

In Dinney's case this wasn't done. And Dinney isn't the registered owner of the mobile home — his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Dinney of Wentwich Road own it.

Mrs. Dinney explained that her son was under age when the trailer was bought about a year ago for $10,500. The salesman for Friendly Mobile Homes, apparently now defunct, didn't tell them they would soon have to move, and neither did anyone in the park office, agents for Litwin Construction and to whom Brad Dinney paid the rent.

The young man also made the mortgage payments on the mobile home, but it remained in his father's name.

Proper notification of termination wasn't delivered to the elder Dinney until the end of September, so Mrs. Dinney claims they can legally stay in the park until the end of January.

"What makes me so mad," Mrs. Dinney said this morning, "is that we paid a lot of money for the thing because of location."

Her son didn't have a car when he was attending classes, so he was able to catch a bus on Craigflower.

"I don't think it's right. The people who sold took a skinning, and now we're making payments on a mortgage for something we don't even own."

Protest halts auction of eight Indian skulls

OTTAWA (CP) — World-famous Sotheby auctioneers have been forced to withdraw eight skulls, including those of two North American Indians, from a Nov. 5 London sale following protests by British Labor MP Bruce George and the National Indian Brotherhood.

Noel Starblanket, brotherhood president, said Thursday he learned of the withdrawal earlier in the day in an overseas call from George.

"I find the buying and selling of the remains of our forefathers a repugnant business," Starblanket said in an interview. "Human remains of any people should not be put up for public auction."

The skulls were described as: An American Blackfoot Indian skull, complete with lower mandible and a flattened American Indian skull with the forehead artificially flattened through ritual deformation.

Ironically, the brotherhood was tipped off about the auction Oct. 23 by the Museum of Man, an organization that itself has been under fire for refusing to return remains dug up from Indian burial grounds.

A museum official told Starblanket: "We here at the Museum, find the sale of these human bones both immoral and unethical."

309 IN MEMORIAM

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me
Thou preparest a table
before me in the presence of mine enemies Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

DC-10 used wrong runway

MEXICO CITY (CP) — A landing on the wrong runway was blamed for the crash of a Western Airlines DC-10 at the Mexico City airport in which 74 persons, including at least one Canadian, were reported killed.

The airport was shrouded in fog when the plane from Los Angeles landed before dawn Wednesday on a runway that was closed for repairs, hit a truck and crashed into two buildings. Officials said 71 of the 88 persons aboard the airliner and three on the ground were killed.

Seventeen others aboard Flight 605 survived. Three were in intensive care, nine were reported in satisfactory condition and five were released after first-aid treatment.

The pilot, Capt. Charles Gilbert, 53, of Rolling Hills, Calif., was among those killed. Two members of the crew survived.

Also listed as among those killed was Miss K. Kronseth of Vancouver. The hometowns of several of the survivors and the dead were not available and it was not known if any other Canadians were aboard.

Earlier, unconfirmed reports said another Canadian, identified only as D.J., 37, was among those who had survived the crash. However, no name with those initials was contained in the passenger list made public by the airline.

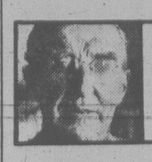

Among those killed was Ken Luycoff, 31, a news producer for ABC, who was en route to El Salvador to cover the political violence there.

Mexican officials said the runway on which the plane landed had been closed for two weeks for repairs and was dark, while the adjacent, parallel runway that was open was well lighted.

Tail marks on the runway indicated that the pilot tried to take off, but the plane's landing gear hit a truck, killing the driver, officials said. The impact sent the airliner sliding across to the other runway and it crashed through a mobile lounge and slammed into an Eastern Airlines building, killing two persons.

"Everybody didn't die right away," said Pandora Drickersen Scott, 19, of Chico, Calif., a passenger who survived the crash. "Some were trying to get out. Some of them . . . they were crying 'Help, Help!' then they were either calm or something must have happened to them."

In Washington, U.S. Federal Aviation Administration officials said after talking with Mexican officials that the crash was caused by an "unknown approach-and landing error."

Roses winter here unpruned

Newcomers to Victoria and district are puzzled by our roses. After living in parts of Canada where roses are severely pruned by the beginning of November it is bewildering to find blossoms persisting and foliage in good condition at this time of year.

The questions being asked are; Should the blossoms be removed? Should the leaves be pulled off to prevent further growth? When should pruning of roses be done?

Here on the West Coast bush and climbing roses never become fully dormant. A certain amount of foliage remains all winter, and flower buds form on the later summer growths as the wood ripens during fall.

A bowl of roses is often the centrepiece of the Christmas dinner table. In fact, no roses at Christmas indicates a colder than average fall.

We are not saying that the blooms are perfect. Often the outer petals have suffered from frost and are removed, but the perfume remains, the color deeper than in the heat of summer, the buds open more slowly and the flowers last longer.

So we leave all the buds, cutting them for the house as petals start to spread. We also leave the foliage so that the plants can make a certain amount of food.

There is no doubt that this growth, which continues in any mild spell over winter, has an effect on the display produced the following June. As newcomers often tell me, our June display is not as grand as found on bushes forced to rest by winter cold.

However, it is the best we can do under the circumstances, and we are willing to forego masses of bloom in June if we can have a few blossoms at Christmas.

No pruning of bush roses is done here in the fall, excepting (there are always exceptions in gardening) in gardens exposed to gale-force winter winds, when it is wise to shorten growths to a height of three feet.

Some vigorous varieties can have stems to five feet and these are the ones to cut back to 36 or 40 inches in length to prevent the roots being loosened in the soil as the winds tear at the long branches.

New growth on the bush type roses always starts at the growth buds located at the tip of the branches and progresses gradually to the growth buds lower on the branch.

If we pruned our roses now the lower growth buds would be activated in the fall and during mild spells over winter, and these would be killed in a cold spell, leaving few if any buds to make new flowering shoots in the spring.

So we leave our bush roses just as they are. New leaves will develop from tip buds and their loss will not matter as long as there are plenty of lower growth buds to fall back on. The damaged tips are cut off in spring anyway.

Around the end of March to mid-April we do the regular pruning because the new growth that follows is safe from winter damage.

Don't worry about your roses. They will take care of themselves if left alone. Enjoy flower buds you are able to pick, and marvel at a climate that allows roses to bloom until Christmas.

Sick Australian PM taken by cleaners

CANBERRA (Reuter) — Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser, who is recovering from a mild bout of pneumonia, was drenched while in his sick bed by a window cleaner's high-pressure hose, a spokesman for the prime minister said today.

He said the window cleaners had made sure all the windows were closed before starting work at Fraser's home last Friday. But a maid, unaware of what was going on, opened his bedroom window to let in some fresh air.

When the work started, the prime minister got soaked.

An informed source said Fraser, who is expected to return to work next week, went to the window "furious, dripping wet and in his pyjamas."

Cheat peeps hit

LONDON (Reuter) — Protests echoed in Parliament on Wednesday as MPs learned of a government plan to issue binoculars to investigators tracking down welfare cheats.

A government spokesman, defending the decision, said: "When you know a man is on the fiddle (cheating) and is packing potatoes in the middle of a muddy 20-acre field, binoculars are the best way to catch him out and get the evidence."

Labor MP Robert Kilroy-Silk replied: "I am opposed to social security abuses, but for government departments to resort to giving their civil servants binoculars and sending them out to spy on the public is monstrous."

Spill halts traffic

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — A 42,000-pound cargo of hazardous benzoyl peroxide spilled from a truck onto Interstate 80, snarling traffic for more than six hours.

The freeway was closed after the accident as the gooey chemicals oozed from 400-pound barrels. The barrels were cracked open when they smashed onto the road.

Mamie's loneliness ends with her death at age 82

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mamie Eisenhower, widow of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, died peacefully in her sleep early today at Walter Reed Army Medical Centre, officials said.

Doctors said the 82-year-old Mrs. Eisenhower died of heart failure. She had been in delicate health and bedridden for months before suffering a stroke Sept. 25.

The stroke paralysed her right arm and impaired the use of her right leg.

Just as the world knew her husband by the childhood nickname of Ike, so his wife was recognized simply as Mamie. Her trademark — from youth through old age, no matter what the fashion — was the way she wore her hair in bangs across the forehead.

Mrs. Eisenhower had lived alone and lonely on a farm at Gettysburg, Pa., at the edge of the civil war battlefield ever since her husband died in 1969. Their marriage, begun when he was a young lieutenant in the U.S. Army, had lasted almost 53 years.

"I miss this man of mine," Mrs. Eisenhower would tell interviewers. "He was my life."

Since Eisenhower's death, his widow lavished her attention on her four grandchildren, the children of son John and his wife Barbara, and her four great-granddaughters.

The Eisenhowers' only other child, a son named Doud Dwight, died in 1921 of scarlet fever at the age of three.

Eisenhower, a West Point graduate reared in Abilene, Kan., and Mamie Doud, who grew up in wealth in Colorado, were married July 1, 1916, the day he was promoted first lieutenant. She was always behind him, if not at his side, as Eisenhower rose through the ranks to five-star general and supreme commander of the Allied war effort in Europe in the Second World War.

Just as easily she stepped into the role of first lady when the military commander became commander-in-chief as the 34th president of the United States. She was a gracious White House hostess and often was found on the lists of best-dressed women, although she never tried for a role or identity of her own.

Ike once introduced Mamie as "my invaluable, indispensable, but publicly inarticulate lifelong partner."

And she, in turn, would say: "I was Ike's wife. That's what I always have been and always will be."

Once asked how she felt about the Women's Liberation Movement, Mrs. Eisenhower said: "I never knew what a woman would want to be liberated from."

After Eisenhower's death she endured in silence the reports that her husband had a torrid romance with Lieut. Kay Summersby, his wartime driver, and that he once thought of divorcing Mamie to marry the young British woman.

The rebuttal to the divorce story was left to son John. In a preface to a collection of Ike-to-Mamie letters, Eisenhower called the allegation an "egregious falsehood."

At the time of the stroke, Julie Nixon Eisenhower, daughter of former president Richard Nixon and Eisenhower grandson David, said Mamie had been in frail health for years and that she had been confined to her bed because of an enlarged heart.

Students 'dying like flies' as La Paz reels from coup

LA PAZ (AP) — Students opposing an attempted coup against Bolivia's 11-week-old civilian government were reported "dying like flies" today in street fighting with rebel troops.

The country's military chief, Gen. David Padilla, denounced the coup attempt and President Walter Guevara called on the Bolivian people to fight at any cost.

The rebel troops led by a right-wing army colonel and backed by armored cars surrounded the presidential palace, the foreign ministry and the interior ministry, occupied the international airport and took over key intersections in the capital.

Two T-33 jet fighters repeatedly swooped low over central La Paz, apparently indicating air force support for the coup.

A rebel communique broadcast over La Paz radio stations said the coup was engineered on behalf of the "peasants and workers" and some leftist politicians declared their support.

Bolivia's largest union immediately called a general strike to oppose the attempted takeover.

Student supporters of the civilian government flocked to the central San Francisco Plaza, set bonfires, shouted slogans and hurled rocks at rebel armored troops stationed there. The soldiers opened fire.

"They're killing them like flies," said one woman in a telephone interview from her apartment overlooking the square.

Other witnesses said they saw thre or four persons killed. They said the firing lasted for about 30 minutes.

Guevara, in a statement apparently issued from a hiding place in La Paz, Bolivians to "defend the democratic process at the cost of any sacrifice."

The armed forces commander, Gen. David Padilla, who himself seized power last November and set the stage for a constitutional democracy, declared that the military units outside La Paz oppose the coup. He said its leader are "a group of ambitious men."

The rebel communique said new military chiefs will be named but Padilla said he remains over-all commander.

The coup is believed to have been precipitated by Guevara's plans to shake up the cabinet and include at least one member of the Nationalist Democratic Action party of Gen. Hugo Banzer, who was president from 1971 to 1978.

Guevara, elected by Congress after a stalemate election, took office from Gen. David Padilla on Aug. 8. Padilla had taken power Nov. 24 and one of his first decrees was to call for presidential elections.

Coups have been commonplace in the history of this landlocked South American country. There have been about 200 in its 154 years as a republic.

Prisoners escape in couch

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Two prisoners who were sewn inside a cloth-covered couch made the first escape from the Oregon State Penitentiary in 26 years Tuesday, prison officials said.

The prisoners stole the truck that carried the couch outside the prison gates and later fled in a car they took from a woman at knife point.

The car was found abandoned Tuesday night on the city's northeast side.

The escapers, Delbert Fuston, 56, and Wayne Strickland, 49, remained at large.

Authorities said the pair had other prisoners in the furniture shop sew them inside the three-by-eight foot sofa.

Fuston was described as 5 feet 6½ inches tall and 155 pounds. Strickland is 5 feet 7 inches and 180 pounds.

Strickland worked in the prison's furniture factory, which makes furnishings for state offices.

Strickland had been sentenced to a life prison term for parole violation as a habitual criminal after convictions for burglary, robbery and kidnapping.

Poison snake alert out as hundreds flee flood

OKEECHOBEE, Fla. (AP) — Hundreds of central Florida residents jammed into motel rooms today, their vacation trailers and retirement homes surrounded by hordes of venomous snakes and flood waters from a crumbled reservoir.

Civil defence officials said between 500 and 1,700 persons were evacuated. Damage was estimated at $4 million as a result of flooding caused when a second wall around the Lake Okeechobee reservoir gave way, they said.

Officials said 300 or more mobile homes and houses around the lake were inundated Wednesday by floodwaters up to 2.5 metres deep.

There were no reported injuries or deaths, police said, adding that officials had been warned of the rushing water by the crew of a train that had been washed off the tracks.

Police warned evacuees to watch out for poisonous snakes that had been driven out of the underbrush and were slithering across U.S. 441, which runs along the east side of the huge lake.

Officials said the water broke through a 90-metre section of earth-and-cement reservoir wall and surged across gently sloping sugar cane fields toward the basin of Lake Okeechobee.

Living nearest the breach in the dike was cattle rancher William Arrieta and his wife, Judy. The couple awoke to find a knee-deep torrent of water in their bedroom and grabbed their children, Patty, 6, Shayne, 12, and their married daughter, Alisa Barfield, 19.

Poison gas used?

WASHINGTON (AP) — There is evidence that some refugees from Cambodia have been attacked with poison gas as well as being exposed to starvation and disease, a Senate refugee subcommittee was told on Wednesday.

Sen. James Sasser and folk singer Joan Baez testified that they were told by refugees that poison gas had been used during fighting between Vietnamese units and the forces of deposed Cambodian leader Pol Pot.

Kennedy, 2 to 1 over Carter: Poll

ROSEMONT, Ill. (AP) — President Carter's approval rating has dropped to its lowest point yet in the Gallup Poll and the president is a 2-to-1 underdog in his race with Sen. Edward Kennedy for the Democratic presidential nomination, George Gallup Jr. said on Wednesday.

Gallup said that Carter's general approval rating was 29 per cent, five percentage points above the lowest rating of former President Richard Nixon.

Gallup, adressing a training conference in this Chicago suburb, did not provide other percentages from the poll results.

He said the conclusions about the presidential race were based on a poll of 1,500 people taken two weeks ago.

Carter is supported by half the number of Democrats who support Kennedy.

Baker bids for GOP nod

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Howard Baker, declaring his bid for the Republic party presidential nomination today, said America "has lost its margin for error" owing to the proposed SALT II arms limitation pact with Moscow.

Baker, who will be 54 on Nov. 15, becomes the eighth declared candidate for the Republican nomination.

U.S. court to decide on patentability of life

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a case with broad implications for genetic research, the Supreme Court has agreed to consider whether living things may be patented.

The justices will hear arguments this term and rule on an appeal by the government from a federal patent appeals court decision that living organisms may be brought under patent.

At issue is a ruling by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals approving patents in two separate cases — one for bacteria that break down oil into simpler substances, the other for a micro-organism that produces an antibiotic.

The patent examiner allowed patents for the process, but denied a patent for the micro-organism.

Over two dissents, the patent appeals court reversed the decision, holding that since patents are available for processes using a strain of living bacteria, it could not bar patents for a living bacterium itself.

"In short, we think the fact that micro-organisms are alive is a distinction without legal significance and that they should be treated under (patent law) no differently from chemical compounds," the majority held.

Cortisone link to new killer?

BOSTON (AP) — A dangerous type of pneumonia that seems to strike people who take large doses of common corticosteroid drugs may be a previously unrecognized form of the respiratory disease, researchers say.

Between July, 1977, and April, 1979, 13 cases of the disease have been found at two hospitals, and seven of the victims died.

Doctors are calling the newly discovered disease Pittsburgh pneumonia agent.

All of the victims were taking corticosteroids, medicines frequently given to treat cancer and rheumatoid arthritis, and to protect transplant recipients from rejecting their new organs. Among the most common corticosteroids are cortisone and prednisone.

Seoul bowing to Chung

SEOUL (AP) — Gen. Chung Seung-hwa, the army chief of staff who automatically became martial law commander after the assassination of President Park Chung-hee, is emerging as the strongest figure in post-Park government, informed sources said today.

Chung wielded considerable power as chief of the 560,000-member army before the assassination last Friday. Insiders say he now is one of the most influential members — and may be the most influential — of the small committee running the government. The committee includes Acting President Choi Kyu-hah and other key military and cabinet officials.

Chung increased his power by having his deputy, Lt.-Gen. Lee Hui-sung, named acting head of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency, a key source of Park's power in his 18 years of authoritarian rule.

Lee replaced KCIA chief Kim Jae-kyu, named by the government as the mastermind of the assassination plot and the man who shot Park and his chief bodyguard.

Chung's status is also being enhanced by the latest, still-unofficial version of the assassination, which portrays him as a hero who resisted the KCIA chief's efforts to draw him into the plot and instead had him arrested.

Some suspicions remain that Chung could have had prior knowledge of the plot because of his very close personal relationship with Kim and his proximity to the scene of the slaying, informed sources said. But because of Chung's very powerful position, most Korean informants are reluctant to say anything negative about him.

More multi-earner families

WASHINGTON (AP) — So-called multi-earner families now dominate the U.S. scene as consumers struggle to keep pace with inflation, the U.S. labor department says.

A record 59.6 per cent of U.S. families that include a husband and wife, or 28.4 million households, now have at least two wage earners, the department said Wednesday. That is an increase of 3.2 million over 1970, when multi-earning families accounted for 56.6 per cent of all husband-wife households. In some cases the figures include wage-earning children who live at home.

The government report, based on a survey conducted last March, said 5.5 million wives have entered the labor force over the last decade. Almost half of all wives either had jobs or were looking for them.

The survey also found a sharp rise since 1970 in the number of working women who are sole supporters of families.

BEAR, Del. (UPI) — There are Elvis Presley shirts, dolls and lampshades. Now you can listen to The King's albums while sipping Always Elvis wine.

Factors Inc., which is licensed by the late singer's estate to produce memorabilia, has signed an agreement with an Italian vineyard to produce a white wine called Always Elvis.

Company spokesman Mark Baron said the Frontenac Wine Co. will distribute the wine.

Always Elvis is described as a dry, semi-sweet wine from northern Italy.

Germanies put pens to boost border flow

BERLIN (UPI) — East and West Germany Wednesday signed two landmark agreements to ease the flow of commercial and private traffic eastward across the border.

The agreements abolish the dues paid at border crossing points by West German drivers using East German roads. Fees paid by West Berliners crossing to East Berlin also were abolished.

The agreements take effect beginning Dec. 1 for commercial traffic and Jan. 1, 1980 for automobiles.

To replace these individual dues, Bonn will pay East Berlin $27.8 million each year for the next 10 years.

West German officials termed the agreements "one of the most important steps" in relations between the two Germanies since both countries signed a treaty approving official links in 1972.

The agreements were signed at noon in East Berlin after the Bonn cabinet formally approved them.

The cabinet also heard from Egon Franke, minister for inner-German relations, that East Germany is prepared to relax restrictions on travel to the east for west Germans living near the border.

Post-coup death toll mounts in El Salvador

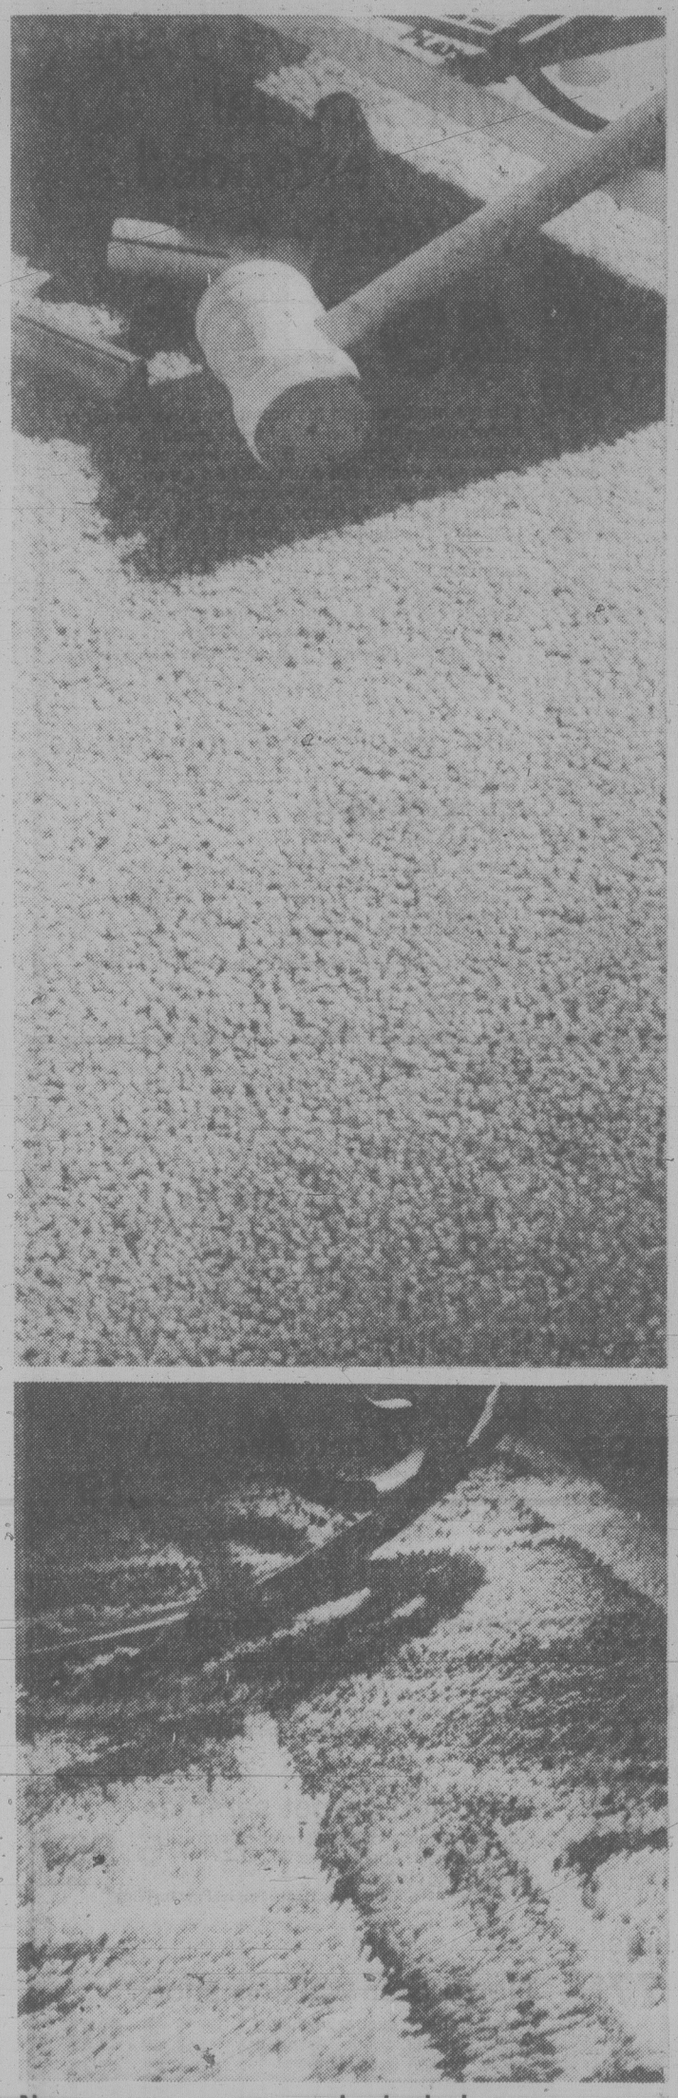

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — At least 14 more persons died Wednesday in the continuing political violence in El Salvador, pushing the death toll in this Central American country to 72 since President Carlos Humberto Romero was toppled last month.

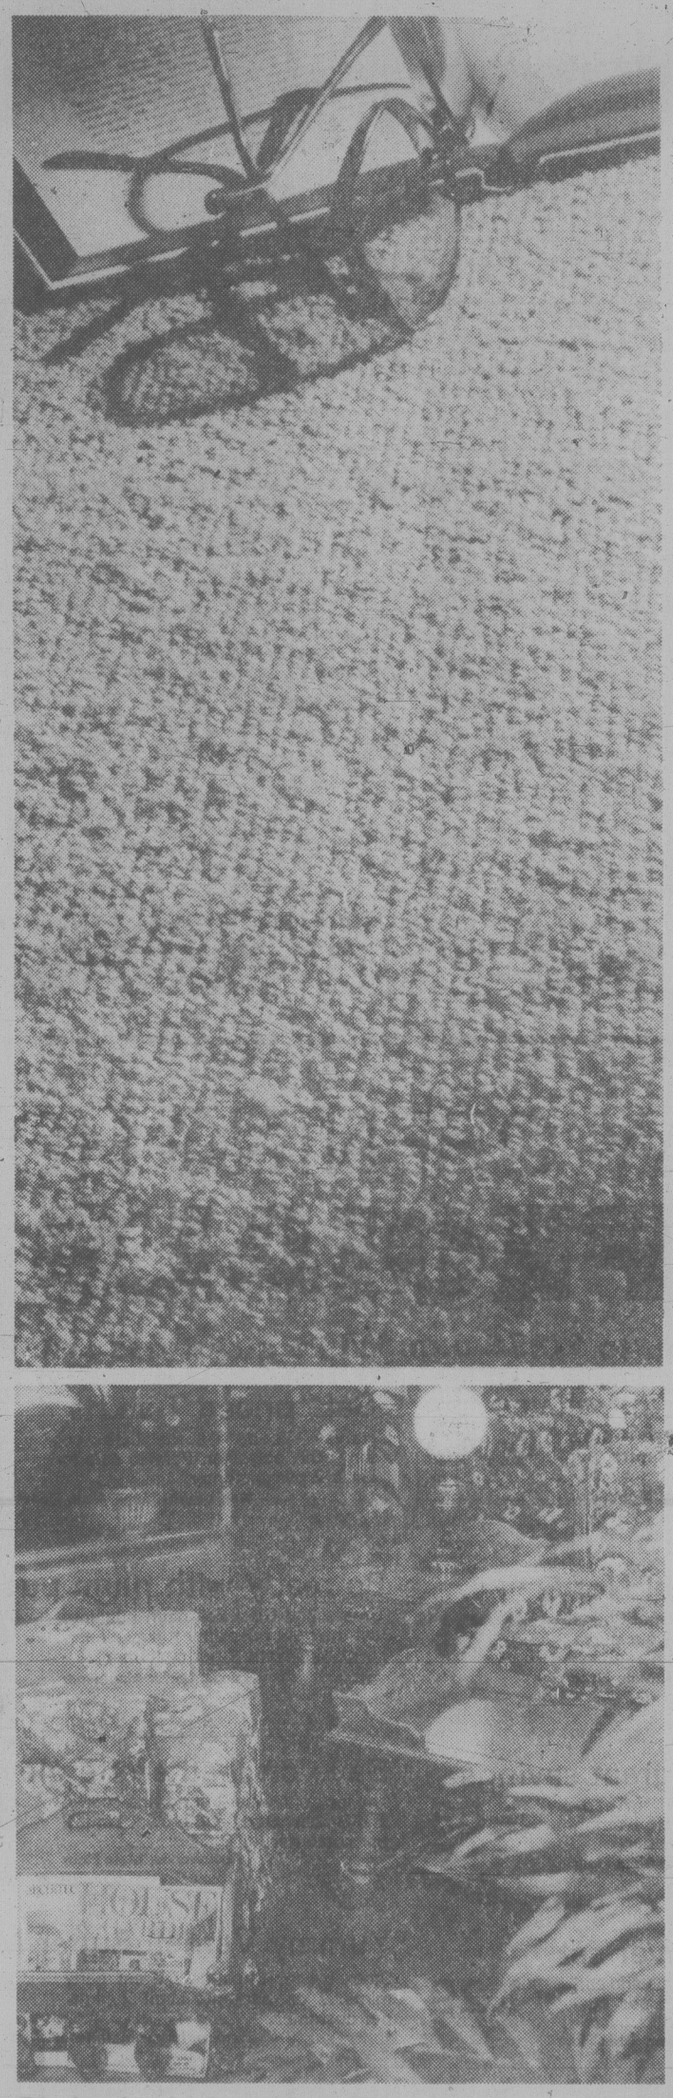

In the latest violence Wednesday, armed civilians ambushed a military patrol at Carmen, about 65 kilometres southwest of San Salvador, killing six members of the national guard.

Blazing ship circles oilfield

4 dead as tanker gets sliced

GALVESTON (UPI) — An inbound tanker and outbound freighter collided at the entrance to Galveston Bay in clear weather before dawn today, almost splitting the tanker and leaving the flaming freighter circling slowly out of control in a Gulf of Mexico oilfield.

The U.S. Coast Guard said at least four crewmen were killed and 39 were unaccounted for.

Crude oil from 400,000-barrel load of the Liberian-registered tanker Burmah Agate spilled and ignited, creating a flaming, mile-long oilslick.

Ten crewmen stayed for a time aboard the Cypriot-registered freighter Mimosa to fight the fire, but they were lifted to shore when the flames consumed the ship.

Two tugboats were sent to try to keep the vessel away from the oil platforms until she runs out of fuel.

The freighter showed a foot-wide gouge stretching 50 feet along its bow.

"A good portion" of the Burmah Agate's cargo was in the water and we've got a raging fire out there, an official said.

He said the tanker remained afloat and "stable" but he said "everything is temporary."

The Coast Guard said seven of the Mimosa's 28 crewmen were missing and 32 men from the Burmah Agate's 38-man crew were unaccounted for.

Fourteen men were hospitalized in Galveston, five were treated and released and more were en route.

Dr. Rongsen Shen of John Sealy Hospital, where the injured were taken, served as translator for Chinese-speaking crewmen from the Mimosa, which was bound for Mobile, Ala.

The injured from both ships, mostly Taiwanese crewmen, were taken to John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, where they stood dazed and blackened by smoke. Many were barefoot and clad only underwear.

Most had been asleep when the crash occurred about four miles from the entrance of Galveston Bay.

That's good mileage!

MONTVALE, N.J. (UPI) — Mercedes-Benz says its experimental diesel-fueled vehicle designed to reach maximum of fuel economy set a record of 4,879.1 kilometres per gallon.

The automaker said Wednesday the mileage record was set at the International Fuel Saving competition at Veltheim, Swizterland by a torpedo-shaped vehicle with bicycle wheels, driven by Frank Maier, 17, of Stuttgart, Germany.

The mark was accomplished by sacrificing speed. The little car moved at only 16.5 kilometres an hour for 96 kilometres.

The 4,879 kilometres per gallon surpassed the previous record of 3,668 kilometres per gallon set in July by an experimental one-passenger vehicle using a tiny air-cooled engine.

Egg-throwing youths battle Sidney RCMP

Twenty-four youths were arrested after a crowd of about 200 armed with eggs, rocks and bottles attempted to storm the RCMP station in Sidney Wednesday night.

It was the most serious Halloween disturbance in the capital region.

While no one was injured and little damage reported, near-riot conditions prevailed until the beleagured 15-member Sidney detachment called in reinforcements from Colwood.

Most of those arrested were charged with breaching the peace and were released to the care of their parents but five adults were kept in police cells overnight to cool off.

Two are expected to face charges, one for wilful damage and the other for possession of an explosive device, a Molotov cocktail.

A Sidney RCMP spokesman said the crowd started forming early in the evening on Beacon Avenue and began hurling eggs at motorists and pedestrians.

It then turned on the police station.

Officers using loud-hailers broke up the unruly mob but it returned about an hour later armed with rocks and bottles.

The spokesman said at that point 15 officers, including a dog team, were called in from Colwood.

The reinforcements arrived about 10 p.m. and within an hour the crowd had dispersed, except for small pockets of rowdies who were quickly taken into custody.

Colwood RCMP fielded 30 Halloween-related calls in two hours and also had egg-throwers to battle.

One call involved a possible arson case at a body shop at Sooke Road and Humpback. Damage is estimated at $1,500.

Shop owner Max Johner extinguished the fire before firemen arrived.

A crowd of about 100 youths squared off in an egg-and-butter-pattie war in Westbrook Plaza. When they started aiming at passers-by, police moved in and cleared out the plaza without incident.

Colwood police also received one complaint of a spiked treat — a razor blade stuck in an apple that was handed to a youngster in the Glen Lake area.

In other parts of the region, three young trick 'n treaters were robbed of their goodie bags in Oak Bay and Colwood and an Esquimalt boy's eye was injured by a firecracker.

For the most part police and firemen felt it was one of the quietest Halloweens.

In other areas potentially dangerous pranks ended up causing little damage

Times News Services

QUEBEC — Rampaging Quebec civil servants threw the planned release of Premier Rene Levesque's white paper on sovereignty association into chaos today, forcing cancellation of an advance distribution of the paper to newsmen and postponement of a news conference by Levesque.

About 1,000 striking workers invaded a hall where a press lock-up was scheduled and ripped ribbons out of typewriters, threw paper in the air and sang Solidarity Forever.

"We made our point," beamed one demonstrator after the lock-up was cancelled. "This is more important than the referendum," another protestor said.

About 600 of the protesters got into the convention hall itself and occupied seats reserved for reporters. They also ate everything laid out for the media's buffet breakfast and refused to leave.

About 20 security officers with the Quebec City Police Force and the Public Works Deptartment looked on helplessly.

The civil servants, members of the 35,000 member Union of Provincial Civil Servants, have been without a contract since June, 1978. The government Wednesday rejected the union's latest contract proposal, and the union has threatened to shut down the government completely next week if its contract proposal is not accepted by Sunday.

About 300 reporters from across North America were due to be locked up in the convention hall so they could study the 100-page document before Premier Rene Levesque's mid-afternoon news conference on the contents of the white paper.

The main contents of the white paper already had been made public by various reporters who obtained leaked copies.

After attacking the press centre, the demonstrators — urged on by burly shop stewards — began converging on the assembly building.

Several dozen demonstrators succeeded in entering the building through a basement window.

Bandits grab $1M in daring truck holdup

MONTREAL (UPC) — Police confirmed today that more than $1 million was taken by at least three bandits who hijacked a security truck Wednesday while the lone guard was in the van.

Holdup division Capt. Henri Marchessault said today the amount stolen in the "extremely well-organized job" was $1,144,000.

"That's a lot of money and to do a job like that, it took quite some planning," Marchessault said.

He said police were hunting least three suspects but that more may have been involved.

Trade surplus takes big leap

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's trade surplus leaped to $641 million in September, the largest monthly surplus since March, 1978, Statistics Canada reported today.

The huge surplus compares with revised figures showing trade deficits of $60 million in August and $13 million in July.

The federal agency said in its monthly trade report that the surplus in merchandise trade for the first nine months this year is a seasonally-adjusted $1.5 billion, down from $2.17 billion in the same period in 1978.

The monthly report contains preliminary figures which are subject to revision as more up-to-date information becomes available.

Finance Minister John Crosbie has forecast a trade surplus of $2.1 billion this year, down from $3.5 billion in 1978.

Major reason for the decline has been the expected slower demand for Canadian goods in the U.S. — where about 70 per cent of exports are sold — because of a recession in that country.

The report on September trade showed total exports were up 12.5 per cent from a month earlier to $6.03 billion while imports declined sixtenths of one per cent to $5.39 billion.

Exports to all countries to date — not seasonally adjusted — are $46.57 billion, up from $38.21 billion in the same period a year earlier. Imports stand at $45.85 billion compared with $35.95 billion a year earlier.

No evidence of police rough stuff: deputy

The Victoria police force defended itself Wednesday against allegations that a few officers have used excessive force against young people.

And Police Chief Jack Gregory told the police board legal steps should be taken to prevent people from making "unfounded allegations of misconduct."

Gregory's comments were apparently directed at community worker Shirley Wakeham who in recent weeks has brought forward allegations of excessive roughness used by certain members of the city force.

Board member Janet Baird urged that the officers under question be identified after Wakeham in a letter reiterated her original claims that some policemen have assaulted youths.

Said Gregory: "Wakeham doesn't bring her complaints to us, she takes them to the press. We should be looking at some legal steps to perhaps stop her.

"This has a serious effect on the morale of the department where we are continually bombarded by these unfounded allegations of misconduct."

Deputy chief constable Jim Smith wouldn't give the names of two police officers who have been the subject of some of the complaints, but when pressed by Baird, he said they are known as "Starsky and Hutch," after the dynamic duo of a television police drama which features high speed chases and occasional rough stuff.

Complaints about these police officers and a third juvenile officer accused of roughing up young people had been made at a meeting of police and several members of the public, Smith acknowledged.

He said he talked to the three constables but added none of them were disciplined.

Smith said Wakeham, who until two weeks ago was a youth worker employed by the human resources ministry for View Royal, Esquimalt and Vic West, named a juvenile officer as using excessive force.

"I spoke to him and he said 'I only saw this woman once in my life. I know nothing about her and she doesn't

Bennett denies plotting 'tricks'

Premier Bill Bennett today denied that he and other Social Credit party officials plotted a dirty tricks campaign at Harrison Hot Springs in 1974.

As the premier was issuing his denial, another phoney letter to a newspaper editor signed with the name of an NDP supporter was made public.

The latest letter, the third with the name of Gordon Townsend forged, appeared in the Cowichan Leader at Duncan last March 28.

Leader editor Leslie Leyne said Wednesday the letter's authenticity was not checked.

The letter criticized NDP MLAs for attacking the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. share distribution.

Meanwhile, Social Credit party president Les Keen promised today in Vancouver he will introduce proposals to remove dirty tricks from election campaigning during the party's convention which opened here this afternoon.

"All parties made mistakes in the heat of the last election battle," he said.

Keen claimed, however, the mistakes were made by overzealous individuals and said the party must gain firmer control over the campaign process.

Bennett's alleged involvement in dirty tricks was claimed by radio station CJOR, which quoted an unnamed party source as saying the dirty tricks campaign was hatched at meetings at the Harrison Hot Springs hotel and at a Vancouver hotel.

The Socreds have been reeling under accusations that dirty tricks — the subject of a province-wide RCMP investigation — were developed by key party figures a year ago for the May 10 provincial election.

But Bennett said today he was referring to the NDP's successful door-to-door canvassing, not dirty tricks.

Bill Vander Zalm, current municipal affairs minister, Grace McCarthy, past-president of the party and current human resources minister, and Hugh Harris, Bennett's campaign manager and current executive director of the party, also were reported to have attended the meetings.

Vander Zalm said he has never discussed dirty tricks with those people, adding he is disappointed the radio station would stoop to making such statements.

Harris said he attended the meetings as a constituent and has been involved in the party only since June 1.

As executive director, he said, he would never con-

Sovereignty-association still PQ aim despite polls

QUEBEC (CP) — The Parti Quebecois government's white paper on sovereignty-association argues that renewed federalism is a dead end and sovereignty-association is the only way out of Quebec's constitutional deadlock.

"If we really want a new agreement between Quebec and the rest of Canada, we must substitute for federalism a new constitutional formula," the document says.

"Recent history proves the impossibility of renewing Canadian federalism in a way that could answer the needs of both Quebec and Canada."

The white paper was to be released later today but despite heavy security measures the French-language daily Journal de Quebec obtained a copy of the 32-page resume of the paper entitled "La Nouvelle Entente Quebec-Canada, The New Quebec-Canada Agreement," and published excerpts.

Recent polls, including one commissioned by the Quebec government, indicate that renewed federalism is more popular among Quebecers than the PQ's sovereignty-association option.

Supporters of renewed federalism "have come to assert that a negative response by Quebecers in the referendum would give the signal for a fundamental reform of Canadian federalism," the document says.

A "no" vote in next spring's referendum would be seen by English Canada as a vote for the status quo.

"This reaction is all the more likely because in Quebec supporters of the "no" will not have been able to agree on a concrete formula of renewed federalism," the document says.

It describes Confederation as a "misunderstanding." French Quebecers saw the 1867 pact as a way of safeguarding the rights they had, while English-speaking Canadians considered it a way to install a strong central government in Canada.

The paper says renewed federalism could lead to the same sort of misunderstanding as English Canadians see it as only "touched-up federalism" while French Quebecers want more fundamental change.

The paper predicts that "by their positive response in the referendum, Quebecers will express their desire to reach a new political agreement with the rest of Canada, founded this time on juridical equality of the two peoples."

"An affirmative vote by Quebecers will thus, in fact, be a mandate entrusted to the Quebec government to achieve this new agreement by means of negotiations.

"By its vote, the Quebec people will have clearly laid the groundwork for negotiations on the principle of Quebec acceding to the status of sovereign state, in law and in fact, and of association with Canada. Sovereignty doesn't go without association — they are indissociable."

The paper delves into what it calls injustices suffered by the Quebec people from early colonial days up to the present. And it argues that the need for full political sovereignty is becoming indispensable for Quebec as the population of the province continues to decline as a proportion of the Canadian total.

It notes that Quebecers made up 28 per cent of the Canadian population in 1971 and estimates that by the year 2001 the proportion will dip to 23 per cent.

Sovereignty-association would fulfil "the fundamental preoccupation" of Quebecers, who "want to communicate and dialogue directly and freely with their neighbors and with other nations, who have no intention of destroying Canada or of being entirely separated from it, who hope to improve their general situation . . .

"The Quebec government shares these preoccupations and has made them its own preoccupations."

The paper says federalism, once seen as a way of allowing both autonomy and interdependence, is on the way out:

"No new federations are being created, but economic associations are being set up and are multiplying on every continent.

"It is this type of modern formula of association between sovereign countries that the Quebec government is proposing, to assure Quebec greater mastery over its own affairs without breaking apart the Canadian economic framework.

"The Quebec government wants to propose to the rest of Canada that it remain associated in setting up not only a customs union and a common market, but also a monetary union. That way we can keep Canada intact as an economic space while giving Quebec all the powers it needs as a nation to assure its full development."

The paper recalls that during the 1960s some Quebecers saw "special status" for the province within Confederation as a way to solve the constitutional impasse, but it rejects this solution, using arguments from federal Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau.

Mamie's loneliness ends with her death at age 82

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mamie Eisenhower, widow of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, died peacefully in her sleep early today at Walter Reed Army Medical Centre, officials said.

Doctors said the 82-year-old Mrs. Eisenhower died of heart failure. She had been in delicate health and bedridden for months before suffering a stroke Sept. 25.

The stroke paralysed her right arm and impaired the use of her right leg.

Just as the world knew her husband by the childhood nickname of Ike, so his wife was recognized simply as Mamie. Her trademark — from youth through old age, no matter what the fashion — was the way she wore her hair in bangs across the fore head.

Mrs. Eisenhower had lived alone and lonely on a farm at Gettysburg, Pa., at the edge of the civil war battlefield ever since her husband died in 1969. Their marriage, begun when he was a young lieutenant in the U.S. Army, had lasted almost 53 years.

"I miss this man of mine," Mrs. Eisenhower would tell interviewers. "He was my life."

Since Eisenhower's death, his widow lavished her attention on her four grandchildren, the children of son John and his wife Barbara, and her four great-granddaughters.

The Eisenhowers' only other child, a son named Doud Dwight, died in 1921 of scarlet fever at the age of three.

Eisenhower, a West Point graduate reared in Abilene, Kan., and Mamie Doud, who grew up in wealth in Colorado, were married July 1, 1916, the day he was promoted first lieutenant. She was always behind him, if not at his side, as Eisenhower rose through the ranks to five-star general and supreme commander of the Allied war effort in Europe in the Second World War.

Just as easily she stepped into the role of first lady when the military commander became commander-in-chief as the 34th president of the United States. She was a gracious White House hostess and often was found on the lists of best-dressed women, although she never tried for a role or identity of her own.

Ike once introduced Mamie as "my invaluable, indispensable, but publicly inarticulate lifelong partner."

And she, in turn, would say: "I was Ike's wife. That's what I always have been and always will be."

Once asked how she felt about the Women's Liberation Movement, Mrs. Eisenhower said: "I never knew what a woman would want to be liberated from."

After Eisenhower's death she endured in silence the reports that her husband had a torrid romance with Lieut. Kay Summersby, his wartime driver, and that he once thought of divorcing Mamie to marry the young British woman.

The rebuttal to the divorce story was left to son John. In a preface to a collection of Ike-to-Mamie letters, Eisenhower called the allegation an "egregious falsehood."

At the time of the stroke, Julie Nixon Eisenhower, daughter of former president Richard Nixon and Eisenhower grandson David, said Mamie had been in frail health for years and that she had been confined to her bed because of an enlarged heart.

Students 'dying like flies' as La Paz reels from coup

LA PAZ (AP) — Students opposing an attempted coup against Bolivia's 11-week-old civilian government were reported "dying like flies" today in street fighting with rebel troops.

The country's military chief, Gen. David Padilla, denounced the coup attempt and President Walter Guevara called on the Bolivian people to fight at any cost.

The rebel troops led by a right-wing army colonel and backed by armored cars surrounded the presidential palace, the foreign ministry and the interior ministry, occupied the international airport and took over key intersections in the capital.

Two T-33 jet fighters repeatedly swooped low over central La Paz, apparently indicating air force support for the coup.

A rebel communique broadcast over La Paz radio stations said the coup was engineered on behalf of the "peasants and workers" and some leftist politicians declared their support.

But coup leader Col. Alberto Natush, former commander of the Bolivian military college, is a known rightist and the Guevara government claimed the coup leaders are linked to Chile's right-wing military regime.

Bolivia's largest union immediately called a general strike to oppose the attempted takeover.

Student supporters of the civilian government flocked to the central San Francisco Plaza, set bonfires, shouted slogans and hurled rocks at rebel armored troops stationed there. The soldiers opened fire.

"They're killing them like flies," said one woman in a telephone interview from her apartment overlooking the square.

Other witnesses said they saw three or four persons killed. They said the firing lasted for about 30 minutes.

Guevara, in a statement apparently issued from a hiding place in La Paz, Bolivians to "defend the democratic process at the cost of any sacrifice."

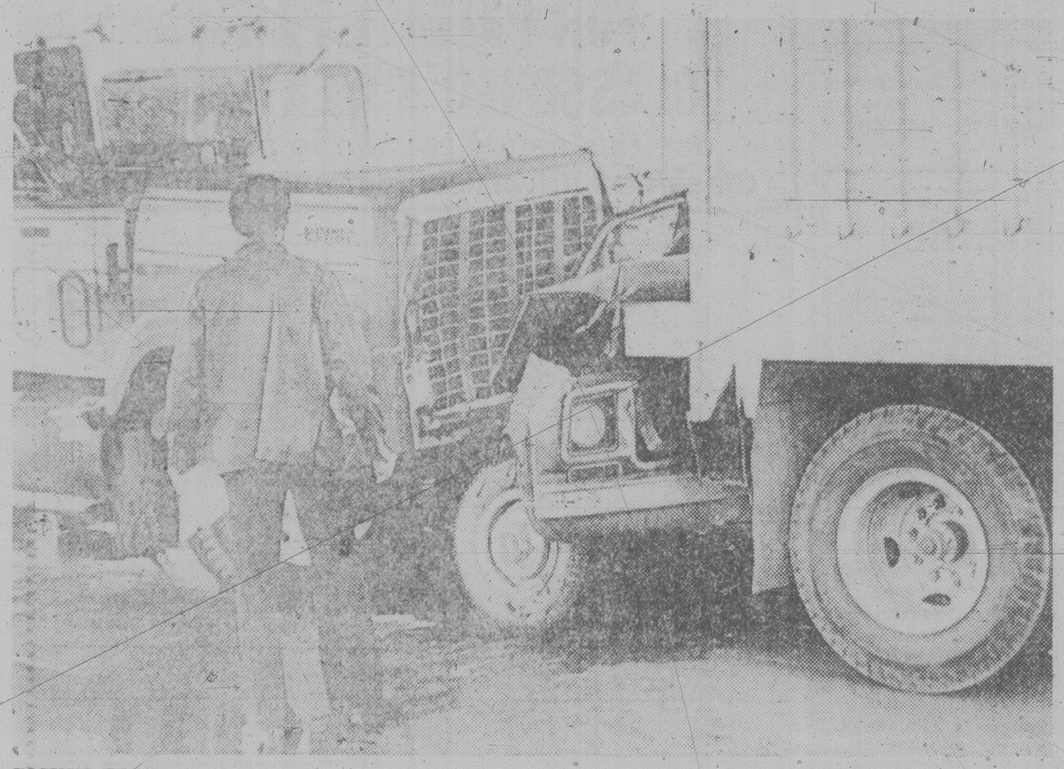

The armed forces commander, Gen. David Padilla, who himself seized power last November and set the stage for a constitutional democracy, declared that the military units outside La Paz oppose the coup. He said its leader are "a group of ambitious men."

The rebel communique said new military chiefs will be named but Padilla said he remains over-all commander.

The coup is believed to have been precipitated by Guevara's plans to shake up the cabinet and include at least one member of the Nationalist Democratic Action party of Gen. Hugo Banzer, who was president from 1971 to 1978.

Guevara, elected by Congress after a stalemate election, took office from Gen. David Padilla on Aug. 8. Padilla had taken power Nov. 24 and one of his first decrees was to call for presidential elections.

Coups have been commonplace in the history of this landlocked South American country. There have been about 200 in its 154 years as a republic.

Prisoners escape in couch

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Two prisoners who were sewn inside a cloth-covered couch made the first escape from the Oregon State Penitentiary in 26 years Tuesday, prison officials said.

The prisoners stole the truck that carried the couch outside the prison gates and later fled in a car they took from a woman at knife point.

The car was found abandoned Tuesday night on the city's northeast side.

The escapers, Delbert Fuston, 56, and Wayne Strickland, 49, remained at large.

Authorities said the pair had other prisoners in the furniture shop sew them inside the three-by-eight foot sofa.

Fuston was described as 5 feet 6½ inches tall and 155 pounds. Strickland is 5 feet 7 inches and 180 pounds.

Strickland worked in the prison's furniture factory, which makes furnishings for state offices.

Strickland had been sentenced to a life prison term for parole violation as a habitual criminal after convictions for burglary, robbery and kidnapping.

Kennedy, 2 to 1 over Carter: Poll

ROSEMONT, Ill. (AP) — President Carter's approval rating has dropped to its lowest point yet in the Gallup Poll and the president is a 2-to-1 underdog in his race with Sen. Edward Kennedy for the Democratic presidential nomination, George Gallup Jr. said on Wednesday.

Gallup said that Carter's general approval rating was 29 per cent, five percentage points above the lowest rating of former President Richard Nixon.

Gallup, adressing a training conference in this Chicago suburb, did not provide other percentages from the poll results.

He said the conclusions about the presidential race were based on a poll of 1,500 people taken two weeks ago.

Carter is supported by half the number of Democrats who support Kennedy.

Baker bids for GOP nod

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Howard Baker, declaring his bid for the Republic party presidential nomination today, said America "has lost its margin for error" owing to the proposed SALT II arms limitation pact with Moscow.

Baker, who will be 54 on Nov. 15, becomes the eighth declared candidate for the Republican nomination.

Poison snake alert out as hundreds flee flood

OKEECHOBEE, Fla. (AP) — Hundreds of central Florida residents jammed into motel rooms today, their vacation trailers and retirement homes surrounded by hordes of venomous snakes and flood waters from a crumbled reservoir.

Civil defence officials said between 500 and 1,700 persons were evacuated. Damage was estimated at $4 million as a result of flooding caused when a second wall around the Lake Okeechobee reservoir gave way, they said.

Officials said 300 or more mobile homes and houses around the lake were inundated Wednesday by flood waters up to 2.5 metres deep.

There were no reported injuries or deaths, police said, adding that officials had been warned of the rushing water by the crew of a train that had been washed off the tracks.

Police warned evacuees to watch out for poisonous snakes that had been driven out of the underbrush and were slithering across U.S. 441, which runs along the east side of the huge lake.

Officials said the water broke through a 90-metre section of earth-and-cement reservoir wall and surged across gently sloping sugar cane fields toward the basin of Lake Okeechobee.

The dirty brown water hit a dike and backed up, covering a 20-kilometre stretch of U.S. 441, pushing northward toward the resort town of Okeechobee.

Living nearest the breach in the dike was cattle rancher William Arrieta and his wife, Judy. The couple awoke to find a knee-deep torrent of water in their bedroom and grabbed their children, Patty, 6, Shayne, 12, and their married daughter, Alisa Barfield, 19.

Poison gas used?

WASHINGTON (AP) — There is evidence that some refugees from Cambodia have been attacked with poison gas as well as being exposed to starvation and disease, a Senate refugee subcommittee was told on Wednesday.

Sen. James Sasser and folk singer Joan Baez testified that they were told by refugees that poison gas had been used during fighting between Vietnamese units and the forces of deposed Cambodian leader Pol Pot.

U.S. court to decide on patentability of life

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a case with broad implications for genetic research, the Supreme Court has agreed to consider whether living things may be patented.

The justices will hear arguments this term and rule on an appeal by the government from a federal patent appeals court decision that living organisms may be brought under patent.

At issue is a ruling by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals approving patents in two separate cases — one for bacteria that break down oil into simpler substances, the other for a micro-organism that produces an antibiotic.

The patent examiner allowed patents for the process, but denied a patent for the micro-organism.

Over two dissents, the patent appeals court reversed the decision, holding that since patents are available for processes using a strain of living bacteria, it could not bar patents for a living bacterium itself.

"In short, we think the fact that micro-organisms are alive is a distinction without legal significance and that they should be treated under (patent law) no differently from chemical compounds," the majority held.

The government appealed to the Supreme Court, urging it to resolve the issue because of "substantial economic interests involved."

Cortisone link to new killer?

BOSTON (AP) — A dangerous type of pneumonia that seems to strike people who take large doses of common corticosteroid drugs may be a previously unrecognized form of the respiratory disease, researchers say.

Between July, 1977, and April, 1979, 13 cases of the disease have been found at two hospitals, and seven of the victims died.

Doctors are calling the newly discovered disease Pittsburgh pneumonia agent.

All of the victims were taking corticosteroids, medicines frequently given to treat cancer and rheumatoid arthritis, and to protect transplant recipients from rejecting their new organs. Among the most common corticosteroids are cortisone and prednisone.
